ROOSEVELT DEMANDS COURTS SUPPORT NEW DEAL LAWS

Washington, Jan. 6—President Roosevelt, in his annual message to Congress, today demanded the extension of his administration powers, called for the stiffening of the neutrality act to meet Spain's civil strife, and, praising the NRA, urged the courts to uphold New Deal measures.

The text of his message follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

For the first time in our national history a President delivers his annual message to a new Congress within a fortnight of the expiration of his term of office. While there is no change in the presidency this year, change will occur in future years.

It is my belief that under this constitutional practice, the President should in every fourth year, insofar as seems reasonable, review the existing state of our national affairs and outline broad future problems, leaving specific recommendations for future legislation to be made by the President about to be inaugurated.

At this time, however, circumstances of the moment compel me to ask your immediate consideration of: First, measures extending the life of certain authorizations and powers which, under present statutes, expire within a few weeks; second, an addition to the existing neutrality act to cover specific points raised by the unfortunate civil strife in Spain; and, third, a deficiency appropriation bill for which I shall submit estimates this week.

In March, 1933, the problems which faced our nation and which only our national government had the resources to meet, were more serious even than appeared on the surface.

It was not only that the visible mechanism of economic life had broken down. More disturbing was the fact that long neglect of the needs of the underprivileged had brought too many of our people to the verge of doubt as to the successful adaptation of our historic traditions to the complex modern world. SEN. CARROLL WINS FLOOR LEADERSHIP

By BERNARD J. DOHERTY

Massachusetts' 1937 Legislature convened shortly before noon today and Republicans immediately asserted their strength by electing Senator Samuel H. Wragg of Needham president of the upper branch and Representative Horace T. Cahill, of Braintree, speaker of the House.

That was no particular surprise, but the election of Senator Edward C. Carroll of South Easton as Senate floor leader was. He was elected handily over Senator James P. Meehan of Lawrence.

Senator Joseph E. Warner of Lexington was elected Senate Republican floor leader, and Representatives William E. Kirkpatrick of Holyoke won the same position for the Republican lead in the House. Representative Christian A. Herter of Boston, Harry Ross was elected G. O. P. whip in the House.

For their first leader in the House, the minority party picked Representative Patrick J. Wynn of Hyde Park.

HAYDEN, HOLT WIN

The Republicans selected Irving N. Hayden of Williamstown to be Senate clerk, and Charles O. Holt of Somerville was re-elected assistant clerk.

The Rev. Arthur M. Ellis of Newton was chosen Senate chaplain for the Senate.

New York, Jan. 6 (AP) — The Spanish freighter Mai Cantabrico sailed for Cartagena, Spain, at 1:45 p. m. today, winning her race to leave the country with war materials for Spain before new embargo legislation could be passed in Congress.

The vessel got away from her dock in the Red Hook section of Brooklyn with such hasty loading of the eight crated airplanes on her decks were lashed down.

In her hold was a huge amount of war materials, foodstuffs, and medicines for the loyalist forces in Spain.

Customs officers watched the final stages of loading. Coast guard officers said the ship, captained by Jose Santa Maria and carrying a crew of 40 men, probably would be

DOOMED TRIO GET LIFE, 3 MUST DIE

Albany, N. Y., Jan. 6 (AP)—Governor Lehman commuted to life imprisonment today the sentences of three of six youths convicted of murdering Edwin Esposito, 22 - year - old Brooklyn subway station attendant.

They were scheduled to be executed tomorrow night.

The three are: Eugene Bruno, 21; Sam Iannucci, 21, and Dominick Ziaro, 26. The others, who are scheduled to die tomorrow night, are Joseph Bolognia, 24; Salvatore Spata, 18, and Theodore D. Donne, 21.

The Court of Appeals unanimously affirmed the conviction of Bolognia, Spata and DiDonno but two associate justices, Irving Lehman and John T. Loughran, dissented as to the conviction of the others.

The law dissenting justices argued that an error in the trial judge's charge to the jury substantially affected the rights of the three men.

Pope Pius Suffers Prostration

Vatican City, Jan. 6 (AP)—Pope Pius suffered a period of prostration late today after discussing church affairs with two prelates who remained a short time later.

Vatican attendants reported the Holy Father "extremely weary."

The 79-year-old pontiff complained at intervals of pains in his legs and abdomen together with shortness of breath, reliable sources declared.

At the Pope's request, a consultation of physicians was postponed by Dr. Amleto Milani, Vatican health director.

Bishop to Officiate At Curley Wedding

Bishop Francis J. Spellman will perform the ceremony at the marriage of Governor James M. Curley and Mrs. Gertrude Dennis, tomorrow, the Governor announced this afternoon.

Governor Curley in making the announcement said the bride had received an affirmative message from Bishop Spellman, who is pastor of Sacred Heart church, Newton, and formerly an attache at the Vatican.

"Bishop Spellman has been a close friend of Mrs. Dennis and her family for years," he added.

'NRA Problems Still With Us'—Roosevelt

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT

Reviews State of Nation, Outlines Hopes

President Asks Halt on Arms To Spain

Washington, Jan. 6—President Roosevelt called today for an "enlightened" interpretation of the Constitution to harmonize Congress and the courts in meeting "present national needs."

Standing before a joint session of the overwhelmingly Democratic 75th Congress, Mr. Roosevelt—without mentioning the Supreme Court by name—said a "liberal interpretation" rather than "alteration" of the Constitution was needed. He reaffirmed his belief that NRA objectives "were sound."

"The statute of NRA has been outlawed," he told the assembled Senate and House. "The problems have not. They are still with us."

The President, who was greeted with shouts and cheers by Congressmen elected in the November landslide that returned him to office, said it was "high time for Democracy to admit itself" when militarism was leaping forward abroad, adding:

"The process of our democracy must not be imperiled by the denial of essential powers of free government."

NEUTRALITY AIMS

As the first cargo of $7,284,000 of munitions and airplanes licensed for export to strife-torn Spain slipped out of New York harbor, Mr. Roosevelt urged quick action to halt such shipments, said some dying statutes should be extended quickly and a deficiency appropriation swift, sizable for relief purposes. Then he stressed these "far-reaching" problems needing solution:

Housing, farm tenancy, social security, unemployment and "over-production, underproduction and speculation"—"three evil sisters who distill the troubles of unsound and disastrous deflation."

COUNT ELECTORAL VOTES

Shortly before Mr. Roosevelt mounted the speaker's dais to stand before Vice-President Garner and Speaker Bankhead to read his annual message, the joint session had concluded the ancient ceremony of counting the electoral votes. Amid tempered applause, the President and Mr. Garner were declared re-elected—523 to 8 for the Republican ticket.

Mrs. Roosevelt and the President's eldest son, James, were present as the chief executive, in ultra-way coat, delivered his message.

Long Auto Strike Feared by Sloan; 100,000 Now Idle

Detroit, Jan. 6 (INS)—Alfred P. Sloan, head of General Motors Corporation, arrived here today from New York to take personal charge of the company's battle with the United Auto Workers' Union.

The estimated number of idle workers rose to about one-fifth of the industry's total employment and threatened about one-tenth of the nation's wage earners.

Upon his arrival, Sloan went directly to company offices, and General Motors spokesmen immediately announced he was making a regular bi-monthly visit.

But his statement before leaving New York presaged a long drawn out war despite efforts of federal mediators to bring the General Motors high command and union leaders together.

"Let them pull the workers out," Sloan said in New York. "It is the only way I know to find out how strong organized labor is. Nobody knows how many of our men belong to the union. I don't. They don't know."

Spokesmen said Sloan would not have an immediate statement here. Meanwhile, the White House kept in touch with the strike situation through Secretary of Labor Perkins who has dispatched three federal

BRITAIN SPEEDS FLEET, WAITS HITLER, DUCE ANSWER

VAST ARMADA HEMS SPAIN IN; NAZI INVASION FEARED

London, Jan. 6 (AP)—Great Britain ordered a mass movement of 172,000 tons of warships in the Mediterranean today after requesting Germany and Italy to answer by Saturday her proposal to ban volunteers from the Spanish civil war.

Four of the British Navy's largest fighting ships prepared to steam between Gibraltar and Malta in naval maneuvers described by the admiralty as "routine," but interpreted as "significant" in the tense Spanish crisis.

BIGGEST FIGHTING SHIPS

The admiralty announced these sailing orders:

The battleship Queen Elizabeth (31,500 tons) from Malta to Gibraltar, arriving there today.

The battleship Barham (31,100 tons) from Gibraltar tomorrow to Malta.

The battleship Malaya (31,100 tons) from Gibraltar January 12 to Malta.

The battleship Warspite (31,100 tons) from Malta January 8 to Gibraltar.

The battleship William (31,100 tons) from Palma, Majorca, January 13 to Malta, the battleship Rodney (32,100) from Gibraltar January 12 to Malta; the battleship Nelson (32,000) from Gibraltar January 12 to Malta.

The cruiser Aurora (5,220 tons) from Malta January 8 to Gibraltar.

9 MORE SHIPS GO

In addition the vast movement of fifteen of nine warships to the Mediterranean, the admiralty announced today that nine more ships would be ordered to the Mediterranean, raising the total number of warships to 24.

EVASIVE? REFUSES EXPECTED

The German answer, it was believed, also would be ready today but would not reach London until Thursday or Friday. Simultaneous receipt of the answers tomorrow, it was said, would not be expected.

Informed circles said Hitler and Mussolini were not expected to give definite answers to the request for immediate halting of aid to the Spanish insurgents.

Such replies, these circles said, would be a waiting move to ascertain whether Nonintervention France's insistent hope that Britain would defend the Socialist government of Premier Leon Blum.

British general staffs likely would confer immediately on British "preparedness" to aid France in event the troop movement is ordered.

First steps to work out such a program were said to have been taken in a conference between British War Secretary Alfred Duff Cooper and Edouard Daladier, minister of defense, in Paris.

The conference gave rise to reports today that, if German and Italian replies to the British demand for a non-intervention answer are unfavorable, France and Great Britain would order a naval blockade of the Spanish coast to enforce strict neutrality.

Despite the reported double military and naval program to combat Spanish unrest, France sent all of last year in a not attempt to solve the troubling situation and confine the civil war in Spain without the threat of armed action.

Immediately after the private conference with Duff Cooper, Daladier hastened to join the deliberations of France's highest ranking military and naval chiefs in Blum's office.

Premier Leon Blum and several of his associates were expected on the Mediterranean coast where they could hurriedly convene an emergency meeting.

Significance was seen in the fact these ministers were the principal spokesmen of the national defense council.

The Portuguese reply to the French-British demand for withdrawal of all volunteers from Spain, it learned was described to foreign affairs circles as "promising."

Incoming calls were limited to those from personal friends.

Senate Speeds Arms Ban; House May Vote Today

By ROBERT G. NIXON
International News Service Staff Correspondent

Washington, Jan. 6—Congress moved with whirlwind speed today, in an effort to block shipments of airplanes and parts from this country to Spain.

Brushing aside precedent, Senator Key Pittman (D), Nevada, sought and obtained immediate consideration in the Senate of a resolution prohibiting such shipments. Adoption of the measure after brief debate was delayed only when the Senate quit to join the House in joint session to canvass the electoral college vote and listen to President Roosevelt's message.

Debate will be resumed later in the day, with adoption expected before adjournment.

Meanwhile, the House prepared to follow suit, and leaders expressed a hope that final action on the measure by both houses might be accomplished today.

A new move by the Spanish government to obtain American war supplies was disclosed when the State Department reported it had issued 19 new export licenses to Richard L. Dineley of San Francisco, to ship a $4,507,000 order of airplanes, arms and ammunition to Spain. The existing neutrality act does not ban such shipments to a nation in civil war.

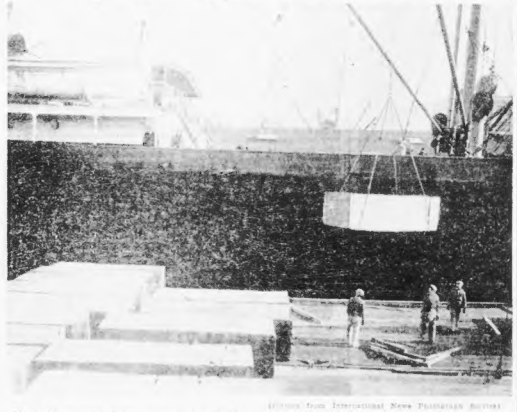
The shipment contains 47 planes, 7000 rifles of .30 calibre, 1000 submachine guns of .45 calibre, fifty .50-calibre machine guns, 41,700,000 rounds of ammunition of assorted calibres and 3000 machine gun tripods.

Dineley said he proposed shipping another $4,500,000 worth of helmets, gas masks, cartridge belts and other war supplies. These do not require licenses.

The $4,507,000 order is consigned to Felix Gordon Ordas, Spanish ambassador to Mexico, addressed to Valencia, Spain, to be shipped via Vera Cruz, Mexico. Ordas was due to arrive here today.

The $5,000,000 to finance the two war purchases is in a New York bank, said Dineley, a former World War captain who has engaged in the business of supplying arms to foreign governments for some years.

Airplanes Shipped to Spanish Reds



These huge cases being swung aboard the Mar-Cantabrico of the Spanish radical government, contain war supplies for Spain. Other cases, smaller than these, were loaded aboard earlier. They were variously labeled "shoes," "clothing," and "canned goods." A case marked "shoes" attracted customs agents' attention when longshoremen attempting to move it found that 50 pairs of shoes weighed 100 pounds. The case was ripped open by the agents, but they refused to disclose what they found. Eight airplanes, shipment approved, made up a part of the cargo.

TEXT OF LAW TO STOP ARMS SHIPMENTS TO SPAIN

Washington, Jan. 6 (INS) — Text of the resolution banning shipments of war materials to Spain introduced in the Senate and House today follows:

Joint resolution, to prohibit the exportation of arms, ammunition and elements of war from the United States to Spain.

Whereas, armed conflict of great magnitude is now and for several months has been carried on in the state of Spain, continent of Europe, with all the weapons of war and of unusual brutality between the government of Spain and a large and well organized group of its nationals, commonly known as the insurgent forces; and

Whereas, the government of Spain and the so-called Insurgent forces each having possession of and asserting the legal and political control over parts of Spain and each attempting to prevent the opposition forces and the nationals claiming allegiance thereto from importing arms, ammunition and implements of war; and

Whereas, it is publicly asserted that some governments of Europe have recognized a so-called Insurgent government and some governments are permitting their Nationals to extend financial, commercial and military aid to the government of Spain; and

Whereas some of the principal governments of Europe have for a long time attempted to agree upon action that would prevent the shipment of arms, ammunition and implements of war to either of the opposing forces in Spain and have sought to isolate Spain from foreign interference or intervention, and

Whereas, said internal strife presents threats of extending beyond the borders of Spain and of involving other countries; and

Whereas, the exportation from the United States of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to either of the opposing forces in Spain is dangerous to the security and peace of the United States and contrary to the policy of our government as expressed by the President of non-intervence in the internal affairs of a foreign state; and,

Whereas, an emergency exists requiring immediate legislative action:

Therefore be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled that during the existence of the state of civil strife now obtaining in Spain it shall, from and after the approval of this resolution be unlawful to export arms, ammunition, or implements of war from any place in the United States, or possessions of the United States, to Spain or to any other foreign country for transhipment to Spain or for use of either of the opposing forces in Spain. Arms, ammunition, or implements of war, the exportation of which is prohibited by this resolution, are those enumerated in the President's proclamation No. 2163 of April 10, 1936.

Licenses heretofore issued under existing law for the exportation of arms, ammunition, or implements of war to Spain shall, as to all future exportations thereunder, ipso facto be deemed to be cancelled.

Whoever in violation of any of the provisions of this resolution shall export, or attempt to export, or cause to be exported, either directly or indirectly, arms, ammunition, or implements of war from the United States or any of its possessions, shall be fined not more than ten thousand dollars or imprisoned not more than five years or both.

When in the judgment of the President the conditions described in this resolution have ceased to exist, he shall proclaim such fact, and the provisions hereof shall thereupon cease to apply.

WALLY Hits Noyes STORIES

FACTS WRONG, SHE CLAIMS

Cannes, France, Jan. 6 (AP)—Mrs. Wallis Simpson has protested against a series of newspaper articles published under the signature of Mr. Newbold Noyes, editor and director of the Washington Evening Star, it was announced here today in a statement issued in behalf of the American lady.

Mrs. Simpson, visiting at the villa of Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Tyler Wade, has been ill here for several days with a severe cold.

The statement said:

"Mrs. Simpson has protested against a series of articles published under the signature of Mr. Newbold Noyes, styling himself her cousin, in various newspapers throughout the world and has asked Maître Armand Gregoire, an attorney of Paris, to protect her interests.

"Mrs. Simpson states Mr. Noyes is not her cousin and did not come to England at her request. The articles in question were never submitted to her.

"Therefore, it is obvious she did not approve them in telegram or by any other means.

"Mrs. Simpson states that after a conversation with Mr. Noyes she authorized him only to publish a 'portrait in words' of herself with the object of rectifying many fantastic reports published concerning her personality.

"However, Mrs. Simpson noted with amazement the actual articles far exceeded in scope the 'portrait in words.'

"Mrs. Simpson states that Mr. Noyes was received at dinner by Edward VIII, but that the conversation that occasion was solely of a general nature and at no time took the confidential turn indicated by Mr. Noyes' articles.

"Moreover, neither the Duke of Windsor nor Mrs. Simpson ever gave any kind of an interview."

Noyes in Denial Of "Error" Charge

New York, Jan. 6 (AP)—Newbold Noyes, publisher of the Washington Evening Star, today issued a statement in response to a protest made by Mrs. Wallis Simpson in Cannes, France, which charged certain statements in articles on the romance of the former King Edward VIII and the American woman were "fantastic."

"I am entirely unable to account for these statements credited to Mrs. Simpson. I am, however, aware of the extreme nervous tension to which she has been subjected in recent weeks.

"I was asked to write these articles by both Mrs. Simpson and the exiled Duke of Windsor. Every statement in them is true.

"I have documentary evidence to establish the fact that both the exiled Duke and Mrs. Simpson knew that these articles were in course of preparation and approved of their publication.

"I do not feel that at this time it is necessary to make this documentation public."

Windsor, Wally May Take Cuba Honeymoon

Vienna, Jan. 6 (AP)—The Duke of Windsor and Mrs. Wallis Simpson may take a belated honeymoon in Cuba, it was learned today.

Manuel Kesmodie Bisbee of Havana, a prominent Cuban, has extended an invitation to the Duke to get his wife's decree absolute, marries Mrs. Simpson, and stay as long as he likes.

The duke is reported to be considering the matter seriously and is to have discussed it with Mrs. Simpson by telephone.

Woman Senator Bans Pet Hobbies

New Salon Takes Oath

Senator Sybil Holmes

Miss Sybil Holmes, the first woman to win the title of "Madame Senator" in Massachusetts, took the oath of that office today.

The Somerville schoolteacher-mother of six passed the 1936 session of the legislature as the only woman member of the Senate.

"I'd like to have a hand in possible passage of election laws to make sure we will have more honest elections."

Asked if she had any other legislative plans in mind, Mrs. Holmes said: "I do not intend to foist any pet hobbies on the male solons," she stated.

"I have always felt that a blending of feminine and masculine views is the more sensible way to get results."

Rolling is not strange to Miss Holmes. Her father served many years in the House, from Chelsea where family lived to Dover.

"I've been in politics ever since I can remember," says Miss Holmes.

Miss Holmes is directing president or members of a number of clubs, political and local organizations.

She was the only woman appointed to act as master for a Supreme Court judge of the state.

She served as assistant attorney-general from 1931 to 1934.

And now the rostrum upon the highlights of her career.

SOMERVILLE AMNESIA VICTIM BACK HOME

Still in an apparent daze and looking seven to twenty-one, mother who has always been known as just "pat," 36-year-old Helen Barrett, arrived home in Somerville today after an absence of nearly a month.

On December 7, the girl vanished while on her way from her room to school.

Months might her father, Frank Barrett, a retired letter carrier, a resident of Baltimore and operating restaurants and cafes in that city, was a proud person, when she had a date with another woman.

The girl had been going under the name Catherine Taylor, spoke with a southern accent, declared she was from Virginia and at first refused to believe Barrett was her father.

She was questioned about a letter, in her handwriting but signed "Catherine Taylor," which had been received by a Somerville youth and which had led to Barrett going to Baltimore in the search.

The girl finally was persuaded to return to Somerville and father and daughter came up over the road, arriving at the Barrett home this Somerville section, shortly before 4 p. m. today.

Mrs. Barrett was waiting up but the girl to whom she has always been so close did not recognize her mother.

"She seemed like marble," said the mother.

Father and daughter, exhausted, immediately retired.

Happy Father With Daughter He Found

Helen Barrett, 16-year-old girl victim of amnesia, was resting at her home in Somerville, today. She arrived home early this morning, accompanied by her delighted father, Francis Barrett. Father and daughter are pictured in Baltimore. The father became an amateur detective in the emergency and made good a quest for the girl. A note written to a boy friend in Somerville disclosed her whereabouts.

ANGELL Appeals for CHARITY

1100 ATTEND FUND DINNER

"It would be a public calamity to attempt to turn over to the government administration of human relief problems represented in the Community Fund."

This was declared by President James R. Angell of Yale at the community fund dinner 10, the Copley Plaza, preliminary to opening of the campaign for $4,100,000 set for January 25 to February 9.

To more than 1100 present at the dinner, President Angell pointed out that the depression, period recently declared as ended brought a shocked change in the methods of philanthropic work.

Had to Step In

"During the depression," he said, "the government, both federal and state, had to step in. Government activities were absolutely necessary, but mere relief, clothing and shelter were not enough.

"We needed agencies which could understand and could carry the rest of the great burden.

"We have not as yet, as a nation, developed that conception of the public service which would make it safe or even practicable for us in the administration of many of these agencies to turn that responsibility over to government, even if we wished to do so.

Mere Act Counts

"Trained supervision cannot be furnished by the government. Therefore, the choice is to maintain what we believe to be of value, this method of doing it, or reconcile ourselves at once to the loss of that element in the service that these agencies render.

"I am persuaded that there is a moral form of education to a community in the mere act of giving."

Robert Cutler, general chairman of the fund, told the gathering that 100 volunteer workers already have been enlisted to serve in the campaign for the benefit of 104 charitable agencies.

Contributors who have supported previous campaigns have generally increased the size of their preliminary gifts this year, Chairman Cutler said.

BRIDAL GIFTS FLOOD CURLEY

And Mrs. Dennis Receives Even More

Packaged presents by scores kept arriving at the home of Governor Curley and Mrs. Gertrude Dennis today, but no outsider knew what the contents were any more than any outsider knew what the bride-to-be would wear on Thursday morning.

There were tiny packages, registered, insured and otherwise safeguarded against loss. Great boxes that required something of an obstetric ingenuity to get them through doors without smashing the corners against the woodwork and medium-sized packages of all varieties.

So far as observing reporters could check, no two delivered with exchanged cards. Even the delivery of the Curley Jamaicaway mansion and at the Dennis home in Beacon street, Brookline, the scores for the bridegroom and bride-to-be were about even.

FOR THEIR DELEGATE

One large carton, safely removed on a table in the governor's library, was a particular source of speculation.

Its pair of stamps were canceled with Porto Rico postmarks and there wasn't a doubt in anybody's mind that it was a token of appreciation from the islanders whom the governor represented as delegate-at-large in the 1932 national Democratic convention.

Sometime late today, the newsmen hoped to get a peek at the insides of the packages, but the governor smilingly declined to lift the lids for the time being.

No more would be tell details of bridal costume for Thursday's nuptials at Boston College would be. And Mrs. Dennis wouldn't either. The governor said yesterday the bride will be married in a travel costume.

ORCHIDS AND GARDENIAS

The bride's attire is to be delivered tomorrow and at that time pictures will be taken for the declination of those who won't be able to see the new Mrs. Curley on Inaugural Day.

One thing was known—that the flowers for the occasion would be purple and white orchids with gardenias. The Governor has already ordered those.

For the wedding breakfast, which will follow the nuptial ceremony at St. Mary's chapel of Boston College, there will be 75 guests. The Copley-Plaza hotel is attending to the food on the menu. The Governor has attended to the champagne.

Weather conditions will determine just what procedure will attend the Governor's farewell walk down the State House steps after he has turned over his office to Governor-Elect Charles F. Hurley. Mrs. curley may walk down the steps with him. She may not.

One Good Turn

Buffalo, N. Y., Jan. 6 (AP)—Police collected $1 from August Merckens, Jr., for towing away the car he left parked too long.

Merckens filed a claim for $20.10 against the city, claiming the police tow car damaged his automobile.

Starts 'Blue Sky' Violation Term

Concord, N. H., Jan. 6—Michael Badin, New York stock salesman convicted of violating New Hampshire's blue sky law, today started two to four years at hard labor in State Prison.

Badin, who said he was formerly president of H. E. Granath, Inc., New York investment company, was indicted in 1935 and extradited from New York last month.

Well-Wisher

Washington, Ga., Jan. 6 (AP)—Louis Amason returned home and found a thief had rifled a wallet secreted in the house.

The money had been replaced by a rabbit's foot and a card reading: "Hope you have better luck next time."

AS I SEE IT

By DAMON RUNYON

(Copyright, 1937, by King Features Syndicate, International copyright and all other rights reserved.

MIAMI BEACH, Fla.—It seems that bartenders are commencing to complain querulously about lady toxpots, or members of the gentler sex who are inclined to rum it up until they are past normalcy.

The bartenders claim that one lady, well muled, can give them more trouble than a dozen gentlemen soused to the gills, and that the ladies present a very serious problem that does not exist in the case of the gentlemen.

DAMON RUNYON

When a gentleman gets beyond endurance a bartender can seize him tenderly by the nape of the neck with one hand, and the seat of the pants with the other, and run him right out of the jernt, with a kick, deftly bestowed, as a parting gesture, and this disposes of the matter completely, for the time being at least.

Obviously, however, no bartender with any sense of gallantry would think of handling a lady in similar manner, and the question that is now before the house is, what should a bartender do with a female person cargoed with corn who wants to take the equipment apart and heave it around?

Certainly he cannot use the old, old formula of a punch in the jaw. No bartender who claims to be a gentleman will dream of striking a lady, at least not with his apron on.

But the bartenders tell us that it is getting an the ladies have no compunctions whatever about slugging a bartender after the eighteenth dram, and as the poor bartenders can't spare the time from their work to take boxing lessons, they are becoming mere chopping blocks for the fuddled fair.

So what can they do?

The bartenders are asking us.

New Code of Ethics Needed

IN the old days, when the ladies were not permitted to infest the barrooms, and had to use the family entrance and sip their toddies in small antechambers, the bartenders had little trouble with them.

In rare cases when a lady did happen to miscalculate her capacity, and start kicking the partitions down, it was a simple matter to quietly open the side door and chuck her out into the alley without any publicity.

But today when the bars, slightly disguised as cafes, stand unveiled to the passing crowds, and the ladies are so numerous in front of the mahogany that a man has to fight his way through them to get at a highball, a proceeding of the nature described would be likely to attract undue attention, and cries of "For shame" would arise and embarrass the bartender.

What the bartenders want is a definite code of ethics to meet the new conditions of barrooding.

A number of respectable bartenders with whom we have discussed the matter say that the ladies ought to plainly state their platform with reference to the equality of the sexes in gin mills.

If the ladies contend for absolute equality, then, say the bartenders, let 'em step forward and fight it out like men. If they claim the protection of their sex, let 'em pipe down when they are in the barrooms and not be bawling out the bartenders.

When Ladies Turn Wild Cats

AN AGED bartender on Broadway was telling us not long ago that there is at least 90 per cent more drinking among ladies now than there was when he was dealing rum at the old Waldorf and other wet spots around town, and that the ladies, when they are loaded, are actually 100 per cent dynamite.

He said in his long experience he has seldom seen a truculent male and that he could not "con" out of his truculence by listening to his woes and sympathizing with him.

But I had one of these cross-patch lady slews only the other night," the aged bartender said, "and I tried to soften her up by sympathizing with her while she told me, between drinks, what a heel she has for a husband, and after I had that too-loaded-and I did think she had plenty-yoned her for three hours, all of a sudden she turned on me and said she wouldn't stand for anybody knocking her husband, and she tried to bite my finger off."

A lady thoroughly oiled, the bartenders say, will suddenly, and for no reason, start leaving screams of sufficient volume to blow off all the toupees for miles around. She can start fifteen fights in as many minutes. The married ladies are better at this than the unmarried ones, the bartenders say, because the married have more experience in starting fights.

The male stew is inclined to be warm, and friendly, but a female rummy sees a threatening glance in the kindliest eyes, they can nudge more free drinks than the most experienced barfly around "21," and their parking jokes. They get insulted quicker than an actor.

Husky Barmaids the Solution?

MOREOVER, as the bartenders point out, the ladies, under the influence of liquor, tend to rubber in the knees to a greater degree than the males, and are therefore more difficult to tote. A gentleman, when he layeth one across to sleep in his joint, generally dislodges between two ear wheels, but the ladies collapse like empty bags and clutter up the premises.

We asked the aged bartender what he thought was the remedy, granting that it would be an insult to their sex to suggest that the ladies drink less, and he said he didn't know.

He said he supposed if he had his way he would repeal the liquor law and go back to the good old speakeasy, where the rules were suspended and everything went, and you didn't have to look to see if the party were skirts before letting a left hook go.

But things being as they are, he said, his idea now is to hire a few good husky barmaids, school them in old-fashioned hair pulling, and set 'em on the female customers who cannot chamber their liquor properly, and who are always glaring fiercely at their fellow customers and demanding:

"Oh, is that so?"

CARROLL WINS FLOOR RACE IN SENATE

(First and General Court of Massachusetts the Republicans appeared to have everything their own way so far as elective offices were concerned.

In the Senate they outnumbered the Democrats 26 to 14. In the House they held 136 of the 240 seats. The Democrats already viewed "fight," however, for they agreed, at their pre-convention caucus, to vote as a unit in all matters.

Governor Curley, continually at war with the opposition party, had but a 10 Republican handicap in the House while the Senate, taking into consideration the fact that its Republican president was elected with the solid support of 19 Democrats, was evenly divided.

WEEDING OUT SIMPLE

Unless all signs fail, the incoming governor, because of his commitment to returning to the pay-as-you-go system as soon as possible, will suffer less from the increased Republican strength in the legislature than did his predecessor under a more even division.

Much of the weeding out of the Curley supporters from the state payrolls, in fact, can be accomplished with the willing aid of the Republican leaders. This will be done through the cutting down or elimination of departmental budget items, for the most part.

Others can be "knocked off" by the simple method of reorganization of boards and commissions. The department of public works, the milk control board, the racing commission and the tax appeals board are only a few obvious targets.

The tax appeals board, especially loaded down with "lame duck" appointees and others without political prestige, appears foredoomed. Bills are already in process of being drafted by an outstanding civic organization, it is understood on reliable authority, to reorganize this board.

INAUGURATION TOMORROW

The inauguration of State Treasurer Hurley as governor will take place tomorrow at a joint session of the two branches of the legislature in the State chamber. The pomp and circumstance attending this colorful ceremony and the following reception in the Hall of Flags will this year be with the ex-governor breaking bread with the outgoing chief executive.

When James M. Curley, as former governor, bends down the front steps at room toward Beacon street, he will be followed first and also by Mrs. Gertrude M. Dennis at St. Joseph's Church, Boston College, he will be surrounded by friends, a hand will blare, cheers will resound, and he will be the recipient of a new automobile, gift of his many well wishers.

PRECEDENT SET

The House was called to order by Representative Joseph F. Morrill of Haverhill, dean of the lower branch, opening prayer was by Rev. Edward D. Sawyer, pastor of Ware Congregationalist clergyman. Morrill and Sawyer were both members of the Socialist Party, but both now Democrats. Those who remember the opening round records say that this was the first time since the General Court started functioning that the first and also since the Colonial General Court opened its initial session in London in 1622 that a Socialist and a Socialist only had been in charge of former Republicans.

Morrill was first elected to the House in 1909, Sawyer in 1916. Unlike Morrill, however, who has broken service, Sawyer has served continuously since that time.

Senator George G. Moyse of Westham, dean of the upper branch, presided at the opening Senate session. He designated the Rev. Kenneth Cheney Geanes of the First Parish Church, Waltham, to deliver the opening prayer in that chamber.

Reports circulating through the state house this morning that Senator Donald H. Nicholson, Republican, Dalton, President James G. Moran, the reporters there was no truth in the report.

"I'll take whatever assignments are given me," he said.

Maine Sailor Lost

Portland, Me., Jan. 6—Edwin C. Smith, 20, of South Portland, was lost at sea from the schooner Alice M. Colby, it developed here today. It was learned today.

$2500 Peace Cross Given to Curley

Swearing in of the new members in both branches of the Legislature was delayed about a half hour during the presentation of the Distinguished Peace Time Service Cross to Governor Curley in the Hall of Flags.

The cross is made up of eight diamonds and four emeralds and valued at $2500. It was presented to Mrs. Agnes Parker, past national president of the Women's Relief Corps, "on behalf of your friends, people who realized all you achieved for your fellowmen."

Standing by her father's side was the Governor's daughter, Mrs. Mary Curley Donnelly, who was presented with a bouquet of red roses by Miss Helen Gallivan, a secretary in the Governor's office.

WRAGG, CAHILL BACK ECONOMY

New Legislature Leaders Pledge Aid to Hurley

Pledges of cooperation to Governor-elect Charles F. Hurley and a demand for a speedy, business-like session of the Legislature were keynotes of the speeches of acceptance delivered by newly elected leaders of the House of Representatives and State Senate today.

Senator Samuel H. Wragg of Needham, newly elected President of the Senate, and Representative Horace T. Cahill of Braintree, elected as Speaker of the House of Representatives, are both Republicans.

In his acceptance speech, President Wragg u rged his colleagues to strive for quality in legislation rather than quantity.

He indicated that he would support the administration insofar as an "economy" program and a return to the "pay-as-you-go" policy is concerned.

"I am satisfied that my legislative record for the past several years has shown me to be a strong advocate of the pay as you go policy in government and of so-called home-rule," he said. "By adhering to those convictions in my leadership of the Senate, I feel certain that I shall be keeping faith with the electorate at large."

HITS CURLEY RULE

President Wragg directed part of his address to an attack on the Curley administration.

"I am of the strong conviction that the outstanding goals which this Legislature should strive to attain are the restoration of dignity and efficiency in our state government, and economy, legislative and executive, and reconciliation and taxation," he said.

Speaker Cahill pledged his cooperation to the incoming administration on all legislation designed for the public good and urged his colleagues to join with him in disposing of legislation matters with speed with a view to an early prorogation.

SHORT SESSION URGED

Cahill pointed out that members of the House against "misuse" of the roll call as a means of the motion to reconsider legislation which had already been passed upon in previous sessions. He pointed out that during the 1936 session that roll calls had consumed approximately 200 hours of the session.

"A short session and early prorogation will inspire in the public that democracy is ever capable of facing and solving its problems not only soundly, but promptly," Speaker Cahill said. "Early suspension of our work will increase confidence in both employer and employe."

Addressing himself to 92 new members of the lower branch of the legislature, Speaker Cahill pointed out that regular attendance at committee meetings and sessions of the House is essential if they desire to serve their constituents faithfully.

"Regardless of party," he said.

Brother Andre, Famed 'Miracle Man,' Is Dead

BROTHER ANDRE

Montreal, Jan. 6—Brother Andre, venerated by the multitudes of pilgrims who brought ailing loved ones to be blessed and touched by him, died today.

Ninety-one years old, the "Miracle Man of Montreal" finally succumbed to the paralysis ailment which made him an invalid many years ago. He was confined to his bed in the Brother Andre Hospital, which he founded with the money received from the pilgrims.

Born a cripple, he was first known as the "miracle man" after nine attempts to join the Congregation of the Holy Cross.

The frail little brother became known as the "miracle man" after reports spread throughout Canada and the United States of the cures he effected while the ailing visited him at the St. Joseph Oratory and he continued to intercede with St. Joseph on their behalf.

An orphan when he was five years old, Brother Andre, then Alfred Bessette, lived with relatives in Quebec. The sight of the statue of St. Cesaire De Rouville convinced a strong influence over the boy, and when he reached manhood he became a brother in the order of the Congregation of the Holy Cross.

Because chronic dyspepsia kept him an illiterate until he was ordained a priest, Brother Andre performed menial tasks. He was a college porter for a time.

As the years passed, he became the janitor of Notre Dame College, and it was there he began receiving the pilgrims who, he declared, came to him of their own accord.

Toward the end of his life Brother Andre returned to a cure he wander alone through the countryside.

It was in 1927 that New England came to know him as a "miracle man" when reports of cures were exacted to be blessed pilgrims and he soon collapsed from exhaustion.

Austria's 'Sandow' To Guard Edward

Vienna, Jan. 6 (1936)—Austria's "Sandow," Eduard Aigelsberger, has been hired as a bodyguard by the Duke of Windsor, it was learned today.

The Austrian strong man was introduced to the famous king by the duke's host at Castle Enzesfeld, Baron Eugene De Rothschild, at a New Year's Eve party. Amused by the giant's feats of strength, Edward hired him.

Found Dead Near Bloody Cleaver

New York, Jan. 6 (1758)—Mystery today surrounded the death of David Goldberg, 32, found on the floor of his store in Brooklyn, with severe head wounds and a blood-stained cleaver by his side.

Shoe Worker Takes Oath as N.H. Mayor

Rochester, N. H., Jan. 6 (AP)—Howard John F. Conrad, 63, who began on his apron in a shoe factory yesterday with the expectation he'd be late for work today, was inaugurated as mayor today at City Hall.

After taking the oath, administered by Clerk of Court Willard Jasmin Conrad, who has been a shoe worker for 50 years, made a brief inaugural address.

Leather Workers In Strike Parley

Boston, Jan. 6—In an effort to avert threatened strike of 10,000 Massachusetts leather workers, Thomas F. Curley, chairman of the state board of arbitration and conciliation, today asked representatives of employers and employes to meet with board tonight at the Hotel Hawthorne, here.

The Morning After Taking Carter's Little Liver Pills

COUNCIL ROWS WITH CURLEY ON PARDONS

Another deadlock over the proposed pardon of John Tartar, South End murderer, threatened today as the executive council met for the last time before the brief pre-inaugural session tomorrow.

Governor Curley was on record as definitely opposed to freeing the lifer, but it was learned that a last-minute drive for the mayor of Mary C. Mahan was under way.

Opposition was almost certain, too, in the case of 17-year-old Marion Lessiger, for whom a pardon was asked. She is now serving a six months' sentence in Dedham Jail on hit-and-run charges.

CONFIRM APPOINTMENTS

Whether or not clashes over these pardons would prolong the meeting, there was little doubt that several appointments would be confirmed under suspension of the rules, eventually.

One of these was the selection of Dr. Harold F. Norton of Hyde Park, as superintendent of Boston State Hospital in place of 71-year-old Dr. John V. Thuot of New Bedford. The latter was ruled ineligible because of his age.

Dr. Norton was tendered the post by Dr. David L. Williams, state commissioner of mental diseases, and Governor Curley approved.

As to who would succeed Dr. Francis D. Donoghue, late medical adviser of the industrial accident board, no such certainty existed. The governor kept his choice to himself before going into the council chamber.

John were also in the making for Councilor Philip Hoard of Fall River, who is retiring, and for several minor members of the official executive family. But these were not expected to cause any controversy.

MENTIONED FOR PARDON

The Christmas pardon list was held up for hours and nearly knocked when the governor turned humble down on Tartar. A renewal of the conflict was looked for.

Others mentioned as possibilities for pardons were the Rollins brothers, denied parole after serving time for murder, and Carl A. Terry of Fall River, former Republican State chairman, now imprisoned for mishandling funds of an estate.

WALSH AND LODGE FAVOR CUT IN RELIEF COSTS

By LUTHER CONANT, Jr.

Washington, Jan. 6—Two both Massachusetts senators favor reduction in the number of relief bureaus and agencies among, it during the past few years was learned today by the Boston Evening American.

Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., youthful Republican, who has taken the oath of office as junior senator from this state, and veteran Democratic Senator David I. Walsh are in the campaign agreement.

David I. Walsh, now 74 years a staunch Democratic member of the upper house, told this reporter today there is a growing feeling that local relief authorities should be given more power.

"Such a move," he indicated, "would lessen the number of relief agencies that have grown up in recent years.

"There is no disposition, however, on the part of the federal government not to provide sufficient funds for efficient and economic relief," he added.

In a more mood following the openic ceremonies of the Seventy-fifth Congress, Senator Walsh placed the role of host to the new junior senator.

HOST TO LODGE

After posing for news photographers with Senator Lodge on the steps of the Senate office building, he showed his fellow members from the Bay State through the imposing committee rooms of which he is senior member.

"Naturally, I recall today," he told reporters, "my first day in the Senate in March, 1919, when I was escorted to the rostrum by the late Senator Lodge, the grandfather of the new Senator Lodge.

"I have every reason to anticipate that my relationship with the new junior senator will be as pleasant and helpful to Massachusetts as that which existed between me and his grandfather."

In the midst of the first day Senator Lodge's first tenuous were for those who had made his nomination in March from the state committee.

Following the ceremonies, some room, immediate behind the Senate, Senator Lodge greeted a group of friends who had come to Washington to see them before seeing them off. Among the party were former Representative Joseph W. Martin, Manevitch, of Duxbury, and Frank Governor, of Newton.

The thirty-two year old has taken to the Senate environment with ease and has made himself at home in all additions. Even the press gallery buzzed through the press gallery that he had been handed a desk.

The first vote of the day [illegible] nothing to the tall young senator, was the moment when he raised his hand before Vice-President Garner and promised to defend and uphold the Constitution of the United States.

The pen with which he signed the Senate register, following the oath of office, now reposes on his desk.

Within a week he will know his committee assignments, but until then officials announced he prefers to remain silent on the matter.

SONS EXCITED

Perhaps the two most excited members of the gallery audience were his two young sons, George Cabot and Henry Sears.

It is the first Washington trip for Henry, the youngest, while George was here when his father served the lower House some years ago for the New York Herald Tribune.

Asked the usual question of what services he was rendering as a relief from senatorial duties he replied that "a walk home in the evening" to his Georgetown residence would prove ample.

For a few more days he and Mrs. Lodge will remain at the Massachusetts home of his mother while final preparations are being made at the old colonial home on N street which will be his permanent Washington abode.

Senator Walsh was still busying today with the unusual visit paid him on his first day by Vice-President Garner, whom he had known well during his days as a Washington reporter.

NEUTRALITY LEGISLATION

Meanwhile, Senator Walsh predicted today that neutrality legislation to ban further war shipments to Spain would be speedily passed by the new Congress on non-partisan lines.

"As is well known," he said, "the first problem of the 75th Congress is the enactment of a neutrality law much stronger than the law which expires shortly.

"It must give the President power to stop the exportation of firearms and other war munitions to any country engaged in civil or foreign war. It will be passed undoubtedly without partisan division."

An informal talk Senator Walsh gave the impression that any assumption that during the 75th Congress of service he had retired would come as a surprise to those who knew him.

It is rumored that the president

CONGRESS WAR ON 30-HOUR WEEK SEEN

By WILLIAM S. NEAL

Washington, Jan. 6 (INS)—A fight over legislation providing maximum hours and minimum wages for labor will be precipitated in Congress by the House Labor Committee's report recommending a 30-hour week bill, Chairman Connery (D) of Massachusetts predicted today.

"The bills will be raised quickly," said Connery. "Since the Labor Committee has recommended this type of legislation before, I am sure that it will act promptly.

OFFERS TWO BILLS

"As a basis for action I have introduced two bills. One provides for a 30-hour week with a licensing card, provisions for a five-day week of six hours each, no 'yellow dog' contracts and a guarantee of decent wages and the right of labor to organize.

"A second bill provides for licensing of corporations engaged in Interstate Commerce. This proposal sets up a board consisting of one representative of labor, one of industry and a cabinet officer to license industries, with restrictions on maximum hours and wages."

EMBRACE ALL

The committee will consider Connery's bill to abolish the unemployment insurance payroll tax and substitute a tax on machinery to compensate labor displaced by labor-saving devices. Meantime the labor department agreed to reconsider its proposed exemption of girls between 16 and 18 in the textile industry under the Walsh-Healey government contract law.

While several members are proposing "little NRS" for various industries, Connery said the committee would seek to embrace all new situations, of an emergency, such Democratic Congress would need to meet new conditions that had heretofore been the usual procedure.

He anticipated that legislation would as a result be much of a similar nature, marked by absence of strife and intensive debate.

The senior senator from Massachusetts is of the opinion that the House as well as the House will have no difficulty in passing the bill and that most will be little time, soon as the pact of Republican to prevent the President's nominations from being confirmed.

Men, Women Lend Color to Congress

Washington, Jan. 6 (AP)—It takes congressmen to outshine women in attire.

All six feminine members were black for the opening session of Congress yesterday, but the men weren't so conservative. Ties of every shade, from brilliant purple to apple green, dotted the chambers.

Some of the women, however, had corsages. Rep. Edith Nourse Rogers (R. Mass.) wore both orchids and gardenias.

A Dubonnet felt hat accented the black dress and black caracul coat of Rep. Nan Wood Honeyman (D. Ore.), the only new congresswoman.

West Springfield Mass Drowning Fear Dispelled

In the confusion which followed police were unable to learn whether all had escaped and finally started dragging operations. Meanwhile at headquarters officers were busy on the telephone, calling homes to learn whether any member of families were missing.

After several hours it was decided that all the persons involved had escaped with nothing worse than a drenching and that the department had busied itself for the same period for no particular reason.

Brann Gets Gifts

Augusta, Me., Jan. 6—Prized possessions of Governor Louis J. Brann, who will be succeeded shortly by Lewis O. Barrows, are a portrait of John Marshall, of Virginia, fourth chief justice of the United States, presented by the executive council, and a radio, the gift of State House employes.

FRANK'S TRIAL BY REGENTS ON TODAY

Madison, Wis., Jan. 6 (UP)—Hopes for more time to prepare a defense denied, Dr. Glenn Frank, president of the University of Wisconsin, will go on trial today before the board of regents on charges of mismanagement.

Although he has already been told the hearing will not be postponed, it is believed Dr. Frank will again plead for a delay when he faces the regents.

If he does, the plea will be turned down, Regents Chairman Harold M. Wilkie said today.

REGENTS DIVIDED

On the eve of the trial, informed sources said the fifteen regents were divided, eight to seven, against Dr. Frank.

The question before the board will be whether or not to renew Dr. Frank's contract, which calls for $15,000 a year.

In presenting a lengthy indictment of Dr. Frank at a recent meeting of the regents, Chairman Wilkie stated that renewal of the contract be denied.

Dr. Frank, present at the meeting, declared the mismanagement charges were not true and asked he be allowed to present a full record of his 12 years as president of the university to refute them.

The board then voted the public hearing which will open today.

It is understood Chairman Wilkie will again address the board and repeat his charges of mismanagement and lack of accomplishments. A rebuttal will be given by Regent Clough Gates of Superior, Wis., and then Dr. Frank will present that, lay a challenge to our democratic form of government itself.

NEUTRALITY ACT EXTENSION URGED DUE TO SPAIN STRIFE

Ours was the task to prove that democracy could be made to function in the world of today as effectively as in the simpler world of a hundred years ago. Ours was the task to do more than to argue a theory.

The times required the confident answer of performance to those whose instinctive faith in humanity made them want to believe that in the long run democracy would prove superior to more extreme forms of government as a process of getting action when action was wisdom, without the spiritual sacrifices which those other forms of government exact.

Challenge Met

That challenge we met. To meet it required unprecedented activities under federal leadership—to end abuses—to restore a large measure of material prosperity—to give new faith to millions of our citizens who had been traditionally taught to expect that democracy would provide continuously wider opportunity and continuously greater security in a world where science was continuously making material riches more available to man.

In the many methods of attack with which we met these problems, you and I, by mutual understanding and by determination to co-operate, helped to make democracy succeed by refusing to permit unnecessary disagreement to arise between two of our branches of government.

That spirit of co-operation was the to solve difficulties of extraordinary magnitude and ramification with few important errors, and at a cost cheap when measured by the immediate necessities and the eventual results.

I look forward to a continuance of that co-operation in the next four years. I look forward also to a continuance on the basis of that co-operation—mutual respect for each other's proper sphere of functioning in a democracy which is working well, and a commonsense realization of the need for play in the joints of the machine.

On that basis, it is within the right of the Congress to determine which of the many new activities shall be continued or abandoned, increased or curtailed.

On that same basis, the President alone has the responsibility for their administration. I find that this task of executive management has reached the point where our administrative machinery needs comprehensive overhauling. I shall, therefore, shortly submit to the Congress more fully in regard to modernizing and improving the executive branch of the government.

Two-Fold Policy

That co-operation of the past four years between the Congress and the President has aimed at the fulfillment of a two-fold policy—First economic recovery through many kinds of assistance to agriculture, industry and banking; and, second, deliberate improvement in the personal security and opportunity of the great mass of our people.

The recovery we sought was not to be merely temporary. It was to be a recovery protected from the causes of previous disasters.

With that aim in view—to prevent a future similar crisis—you and I joined in a series of enactments—safe banking and sound currency, the guarantee of bank deposits, protection for the investor in securities, the removal of the threat of agricultural surpluses, insistence on collective bargaining, the outlawing of sweat shops, child labor and unfair trade practices, and the beginnings of security for the aged and the worker.

Deeper Purpose

Nor was the recovery we sought merely a purposeless whirring of machinery. It is important, of course, that every man and woman in the country be able to find work, that every factory run, that business as a whole earn profits. But government in a democratic nation does not exist solely, or even primarily, for that purpose.

It is not enough that the wheels turn. They must carry us in the direction of a greater satisfaction in life for the average man.

The deeper purpose of a democratic government is to assist as many of its citizens as possible—especially those who need it most—to improve their conditions of life, to retain all personal liberty which does not unevenly affect their neighbors, and to pursue the happiness which comes with security and an opportunity for recreation and culture.

Even with our present recovery we are far from the goal of that deeper purpose. There are far-reaching problems still with us for which democracy must find solution if it is to consider itself successful.

Menace of Slums

For example, many millions of Americans still live in habitations which not only fail to provide the physical benefits of modern civilization, but breed disease and impair the health of future generations.

The menace exists not only in the slum areas of the very large cities, but in many smaller cities as well. It exists on tens of thousands of farms, in varying degrees, in every part of the country.

Another example is the prevalence of an unAmerican type of tenant farming. I do not suggest that every farm family has the capacity to earn a satisfactory living on its own farm.

But many thousands of tenant farmers—indeed, most of them—with some financial assistance and with some advice and training, can be made self-supporting on land which can eventually belong to them.

The nation would be wise to offer them that chance instead of permitting them to go along as they do now, year after year, with neither future security as tenants nor hope of ownership of their homes nor expectation of bettering the lot of their children.

Another national problem is the intelligent development of our social security system, the broadening of the services it renders, and practical improvement in its operation.

In many nations where such laws are in effect, success in meeting the expectations of the community has come through frequent amendment of the original statute.

And, of course, the most far-reaching and the most inclusive problem of all is that of unemployment and the lack of economic balance of which unemployment is at once the result and the symptom.

The immediate question of adequate relief for the needy unemployed who are capable of performing useful work, I shall discuss with the Congress during the coming months.

The broader task of preventing unemployment is a matter of long-range evolutionary policy. To that we must continue to give our best thought and effort.

We cannot assume that immediate industrial and commercial activity which mitigates present pressures justifies the national government at this time in placing the unemployment problem in a filing cabinet of finished business.

Speculation Waste

Fluctuations in employment are tied to all other wasteful fluctuations in our mechanism of production and distribution. One of these wastes is speculation.

In securities or commodities, the larger volume of speculation, the wider become the upward and downward swings and the more certain the result that in the long run there will be more losses than gains in the underlying wealth of the community.

And, as is now well known to all of us, the same net loss to society comes from reckless overproduction and monopolistic underproduction of natural and manufactured commodities.

Overproduction, underproduction and speculation are three evil sisters who distill the troubles of unsound inflation and disastrous deflation.

It is to the interest of the nation to have government help private enterprise to gain sound general price levels and to protect those levels from wide perilous fluctuations.

We know now that if early in 1931 government had taken the steps which were taken two and three years later, the depression would never have reached the depths of the beginning of 1933.

Sober second thought confirms most of us in the belief that the broad objectives of the National Recovery Act were sound. We know now that its difficulties arose from the fact that it tried to do too much.

For example, it was unwise to expect the same agency to regulate the length of working hours, minimum wages, child labor and collective bargaining on the one hand and the complicated questions of unfair trade practices and business controls on the other.

NRA Problem

The statute of NRA has been outlawed. The problems have not. They are still with us.

That decent conditions and adequate pay for labor, and just return for agriculture, can be secured through parallel and simultaneous action by forty-eight states is a proven impossibility.

It is equally impossible to obtain curbs on monopoly, unfair trade practices and speculation by state action alone. There are those who, sincerely or insincerely, still cling to state action as a theoretical hope.

But experience with actualities makes it clear that federal laws supplementing state laws are needed to help solve the problems which result from modern invention applied in an industrialized nation which conducts its business with scant regard to state lines.

During the past year there has been a growing belief that there is little fault to be found with the Constitution of the United States as it stands today. The vital need is not an alteration of our fundamental law, but an increasingly enlightened view with reference to it.

Difficulties have grown out of its interpretation; but rightly considered, it can be used as an instrument of progress, and not as a device for prevention of action.

It is worth our while to read and re-read the preamble of the Constitution, and Article 1 thereof which confers the legislative powers upon the Congress of the United States.

It is also worth our while to read again the debates in the Constitutional Convention of one hundred and fifty years ago.

From such reading, I obtain the very definite thought that the members of that convention were fully aware that civilization would raise problems for the proposed new Federal government, which they themselves could not even surmise; and that it was their definite intent and expectation that a liberal interpretation in the years to come would give to the Congress the same relative powers over new national problems as they themselves gave to the Congress over the national problems of their day.

In presenting to the convention the first basic draft of the Constitution, Edmund Randolph explained that it was the purpose "to insert essential principles only, lest the operation of government should be clogged by rendering those provisions permanent and unalterable which ought to be accommodated to times and events."

With a better understanding of our purposes, and a more intelligent recognition of our needs as a nation, it is not to be assumed that there will be prolonged failure to bring legislative and judicial action into closer harmony.

Means must be found to adopt our legal forms and our judicial interpretation to the actual present national needs of the largest progressive democracy in the modern world.

World Problems

That thought leads to a consideration of world problems. To go no further back than the beginning of this century, men and women everywhere were seeking conditions of life very different from those which were customary before modern invention and modern industry and modern communications had come into being.

The World War, for all of its tragedy, encouraged these demands, and stimulated action to fulfill these new desires.

Many national governments seemed unable adequately to respond; and, often with the improvident assent of the masses of the people themselves, new forms of government were set up with oligarchy taking the place of democracy.

In oligarchies, militarism has leaped forward, while in those nations which have retained democracy, militarism has waned.

I have recently visited three of our sister republics in South America. The very cordial receptions with which I was greeted were in tribute to democracy.

To me the outstanding observation of that visit was that the masses of the peoples of all the Americas are convinced that the democratic form of government can be made to succeed and do not wish to substitute for it any other form of government.

They believe that democracies are best able to cope with the changing problems of modern civilization within themselves, and that democracies are best able to maintain peace among themselves.

The Inter-American Conference, operating on these fundamental principles of democracy, did much to assure peace in this hemisphere. Existing peace machinery was improved. New instruments to maintain peace and eliminate causes of war were adopted.

Wider protection of the interests of the American republics in the event of war outside the Western Hemisphere was provided. Respect for, and observance of, international treaties and international law were strengthened.

Trade Peace Aid

Principles of liberal trade policies, as effective aids to the maintenance of peace, were reaffirmed. The intellectual and cultural relationships among American republics were broadened as a part of the general peace program.

In a world unhappily thinking in terms of war, the representatives of twenty-one nations sat around a table, in an atmosphere of complete confidence and understanding, sincerely discussing measures for maintaining peace.

Here was a great and a permanent achievement directly affecting the lives and security of the two hundred and fifty million human beings who dwell in this Western Hemisphere. Here was an example which must have a wholesome effect upon the rest of the world.

In a very real sense, the conference in Buenos Aires sent forth a message on behalf of all the democracies of the world to those nations which live otherwise. Because such other governments are perhaps more spectacular, it was high time for democracy to assert itself.

Because all of us believe that our democratic form of government can cope adequately with modern problems as they arise, it is patriotic as well as logical for us to prove that we can meet new national needs with new laws consistent with a historic constitutional framework clearly intended to receive liberal and not narrow interpretation.

The United States of America, within itself, must continue the task of making democracy succeed.

In that task the legislative branch of our government will, I am confident, continue to meet the demands of democracy whether they relate to the curbing of abuses, the extension of help to those who need help, or the better balancing of our interdependent economies.

So, too, the executive branch of the government must move forward in this task, and, at the same time, provide better management for administrative action of all kinds.

Judiciary Aid

The judicial branch also is asked by the people to do its part in making democracy successful. We do not ask the courts to call non-existent powers into being, but we have a right to expect that conceded powers or those legitimately implied shall be made effective instruments for the common good.

The process of our democracy must not be imperilled by the denial of essential powers of free government.

Your task and mine is not ending with the end of the depression. The people of the United States have made it clear that they expect us to continue our active efforts in behalf of their peaceful advancement.

In that spirit of endeavor and service I greet the Seventy-fifth Congress at the beginning of this auspicious New Year.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

3 Children Saved From Quincy Fire By Heroic Father

Flames roaring around him and smoke choking him, James Riley of Goddard street, South Quincy, smashed through a bedroom window and lowered his three small children into the arms of his wife today.

Then he himself leaped out the window, the last person out of the house. The fire swept up through the two-family dwelling, causing two alarms to be sounded. Damage was estimated at $2500.

Eleven persons in all were compelled to leave the house for the bitter winter temperatures. Mrs. Odelle Riley, the grandmother of the family, first gave the alarm.

With her husband, Gerald, 60, and four sons, Emery, 31; Edgar, 23; Richard, 20, and Harry, 10, she fled down the stairs, shouting a warning to the married son, James.

James directed his wife to get out through the door. Then he ran to a back bedroom where their three children were—two of them ill with colds.

Barehanded, he smashed the window, wrapped the children in blankets and passed them out to his wife.

James, Jr., 4, and Robert, 3, the sick ones, went first. Then two-year old Gerald. Then the father jumped. He was treated later for his lacerated hands.

FIVE ESCAPED BOYS HUNTED

Westhaven, Jan. 6—Five boys, one from Boston, escaped from Lyman Training School today as they were marching to chapel.

Superintendent Charles A. DuBois reported that the youths, Floyd Johnson, 18, of Boston; Edward Lane, 16, of Natick; James Malley, 16, of Worcester; Donald Matti, 19, of Springfield, and Earl De Lude of Medford, had their escape well planned.

Together at the end of the procession, the five suddenly darted up an embankment and disappeared into the woods.

State police expressed the opinion that all of the boys would be rounded up by nightfall.

SLOAN GUIDES AUTO STRIKE FIGHT; 100,000 NOW IDLE

mediators here—James F. Dewey, John E. O'Connor and Edward McDonald.

At the same time, Gov. Frank Murphy, who has promised there would be "no violence" in the sit-down strikes, was considering appointment of a fact-finding commission to satisfy demands for first hand information from Washington.

With increasing layoffs in allied plants and curtailments in 19 of General Motors's 63 far flung plants, the number of idle was estimated around 100,000.

The Automotive Daily News, a trade publication, today reported shortage of supplies are expected to be felt within a week or 10 days, threatening other producers in the industry.

The industry hires about 500,000 producers and common laborers, while it is estimated between 5,000,000 and 6,000,000 wage earners are directly or indirectly dependent on it.

LATE DEVELOPMENTS

Late developments included:

1—Federal Mediator Dewey was reported arranging a conference between General Motors high command and Homer Martin, head of the U. A. W.

2—Martin said he would gladly co-operate with the federal conciliators "because we have pledged ourselves to co-operate with all government agencies."

3—Workers at Cadillac and Fleetwood divisions of General Motors await reply to union demands expected tomorrow afternoon, one of the key points being a national conference to cover collective bargaining in all General Motors plants.

4—Frank X. Martel, president of the Wayne County Branch of the A. F. of L., whose national organization is at odds with John L. Lewis' C. I. O., assured Martin the federation stands behind the strikers. "We'll back the auto workers to the last ditch," said Martel.

Sloan's latest statement indicated General Motors would remain adamant in its refusal to recognize the U. A. W. as the sole collective bargaining agency for workers, as well as to meet with the union on a national basis.

The union has been repeatedly referred to managers of local plants with its alleged grievances, but Martin contends action lies in a meeting directly with the GM high command.

Martin, who claims the union has enough enrollment to completely paralyze operations by General Motors' 235,000 workers, broadly hinted a general strike already is in progress.

His statements were borne out by new strikes and shutdowns since the union head of strategy was voted authority to call a general strike. Martin indicated the union would call out workers in individual plants whenever it saw fit.

SIT-DOWN STRIKE

Sit-down strikes were reported in the Chevrolet and Fisher Body plants at Janesville, Wis. with 2500 men affected. About 800 workers in the Fisher Lumber Corporation at Memphis, Tenn., were said here to have been laid off because of strikes in other General Motors plants.

Toledo Chevrolet, with 1000 workers, was closed down by a strike only a few hours before, and 7000 of 12,000 employes at Fruehauf Parts Manufacturing Company here also were laid off yesterday.

About 14 General Motors plants now are affected. It was still impossible to get the exact number of idle in General Motors plants and its suppliers in the parts and rubber industries, but most estimates placed it at about 100,000.

5 VICE DENS AGAIN IN BROOKLINE

Five vice dens are operating "full blast" in Brookline, ironically enough, in spite of the spotlight thrown on conditions there in the current investigation of alleged police lawlessness, was learned today from an official investigator.

The attitude of the Brookline authorities, according to this investigator, is that so long as the gambling and vice dens are conducted in such a manner as to cause little or no disturbance to the neighborhood, they will be permitted to operate.

As a result of the attitude, he said, the dens are running wide open, some of them all night, with no attempt being made by the authorities to interfere even to the extent of closing the establishments during the usual "closing" hours.

PROTECTION FEE OFF

The persons operating the dens are no longer under the necessity of paying for protection, the investigator, in reporting to the Society for the Prevention of Crime (SPC), declared. Instead all payments for the time being are going to the district attorney's office to help finance the investigation of the police department by the district attorney's office and the Boston Finance Commission, he said.

Evidence that the dens are operating was obtained by investigators working for the SPC, the investigator declared. Some of the dens are said to be in apartment houses, others in private homes.

SEXTON WANTS PROBE

"The Brookline police aren't going to raid, to show the civil reports were right, and these women know it," he remarked.

"They feel that the worst that can happen to them is to be asked to leave town. In fact, they feel that short term in jail or sentences in Brookline are a joke."

Chief Sexton of Brookline, when contacted today, declined to comment on the report that gambling and vice dens were operating openly in Brookline.

"I have no statement to make," he said briefly.

Two Near Death In Auto Smashup

Two Greater Boston residents were killed and a third was injured seriously in automobile accidents in this section of the state during the week-end.

A commuting and part-time farmer, Joseph Bonfiglio, 50, of 1 Bonfiglio court, Medford, died in the Malden Hospital early today from injuries received in an automobile accident on the Revere-Saugus road, Revere, Saturday afternoon.

The name of the other victim, a woman, was not learned immediately. She was killed instantly on the Revere-Saugus road, Revere, Saturday afternoon.

Hospital authorities said they were: Earl Harvey of Worcester and Matthew Perow of Boston.

Both were suffering from severe degree burns.

The victim, headed with a friend, was driving his car on the road toward Saugus when it suddenly struck the rear of a truck standing on the roadway in front of him. The truck was owned by Frank Cavicchi of Revere.

Bonfiglio, a native of Italy, was admitted to the hospital suffering from severe burns and bruises about the body and head. He died shortly after he was admitted.

Harvey, who was driving the car, was admitted to the hospital suffering from severe burns and bruises about the body and head. He died shortly after he was admitted.

Perow, who was riding with Harvey, suffered severe burns about the face and body. He was admitted to the hospital suffering from severe burns and bruises about the body and head. He died shortly after he was admitted.

He came back at 9 p.m. today—a block from the institution—to be injured seriously by an automobile.

PRESIDENTIAL BALL GOAL IS 40,000

To avoid conflict with the President Roosevelt Birthday Party in Cambridge, January 29, many cities and towns have abandoned their plans for similar parties the same day.

As a result, a total of 40,000 is the goal for the Boston Committee for the Ball, according to Mayor Mansfield and Director of the Fine Arts Project, Mrs. Ethel Rosenberg Taylor, who launched the local ball campaign today.

Of the proceeds from the two functions, 70 per cent will go to the local committee and the remaining 30 per cent to the national committee on infantile paralysis research.

As last year, the entire fund will go to aid those victims and will make it possible for many of them to walk again.

Only one other party is scheduled for the Greater Boston area, in Governor Charles F. Hurley will attend both affairs and at the Boston headquarters for the President's Ball, 258 Washington street.

Russian Fliers Outclass Germans, Italians in Spain, Bert Acosta Says

U. S. Airmen Hear Seductive Call Of Big Money

BERT ACOSTA

Soviet Organized Thoroughly in Everything

Bert Acosta, noted American transatlantic flier who has just returned to Paris after serving six months with the Spanish Government air force, tells how a Spanish commander pushed a revolver into his stomach and fired. Last one of Acosta's three American companions to leave Aces to take off in a "flying coffin."

This incident is related here, with in the second of a series of three articles by Acosta, graphically exciting his experiences in Spain's civil war.

(Copyright, 1937, by International News Service. Reproduction in whole or part strictly prohibited.)

Paris, Jan. 6 (INS)—Red Spain finds itself in a fight to the finish in the days ahead. And it won't take long.

Ever since the Russians arrived the Reds have had superiority of the air, and General Francisco Franco and Italian troops are supposed to be on the way to Malaga.

I know what I am talking about. I was there in action day after day for three months.

We and Americans who fought Spain on the German front have come to the conclusion that the Russians are the only ones responsible for the present situation.

As I wrote for Universal Service readers in the first article, we were told we were going to fight Communism, but what we were described to us by Loew Yorkers as struggle of a democratic government against fascism was just out of a fight between Communism and Communism. The Reds are supported by Russia, and the Fascists by Germany and Italy.

If we had been Russians that might have been another matter. The Russians in Spain have as so-called "advisers" the best fighting pilots and gunners in the air. Their guns ring the air to the every performing and every backing good fighting formula.

As for us, well—

I had no more idea of flying and fighting in Spain when I left my home in Jersey City last October, to New York, I received an offer to join a group of fliers who were going to Spain to fight Fascism.

Many of them, there of pre-war experience, were going to fight Communism. I was going for the fun of it.

Besides, some money, real money, was being offered. Samuel Pozner, a former Russian Soviet official, was in charge of the Madrid government's air forces. In some of the Spanish cities they offered $1000 for every plane shot down plus $500 for every one shot down plus $500 for every one shot down plus $500.

Pozner, who is now in the prison of all prisons, was sent to Spain with a big staff of Russian officers and a million francs to spend. He was a Soviet Marshal and a former commissar of the Red Army. He was sent to Spain to "run Franco out of Spain in three months."

A commission and many contracts were given out to Russian manufacturers. Pozner, who was in charge of the Russian Soviet Republic's air forces, was also in charge of the Russian Soviet Republic's air forces.

Juliana Weds Tomorrow

Queen Pays Bills for Bridesmaids

The Hague, Jan. 6 (AP)—Wilhelmina of Holland dug down in her queenly purse today to help out the German Princess-bridesmaids of Crown Princess Juliana, who becomes a bride tomorrow.

First German resentment over the impending of Nazi Exiles and the non-flying of Nazi swastikas forced prosaic difficulties for the bridesmaids, who include the Princesses Knastenz and Sieglinde Zu Lippe-Biesterfeld of Saxe-Weimar-Eisenach, kinswomen of the bridegroom, Prince Bernhard Zu Lippe-Biesterfeld.

That was ironed out, but the Dutch government pursuing its usual economy when citizens go to the country or visit, permitted the bridesmaids to depart with but 10 marks apiece (less than $4).

So the queen is defraying all expenditures—including those for the maids' dresses. Every dress is unobtrusive and pin money for the girls.

The various difficulties which have arisen, well-informed sources declared, have been caused by zealous efforts of Dutch leaders to prevent the world from thinking Bernhard's marriage to their future queen meant Holland was moving toward Nazidom.

Gaiety at Climax

The pre-nuptial celebrations were scheduled to reach a brilliant climax tonight at a dinner in the royal palace.

Imprisoned tax defaulters and other offenders looked toward the royal wedding gleefully, assured of Queen Wilhelmina's annual act of clemency.

Among those who expected to benefit were members of the Dutch worship Zeven Provincien, who seized the vessel in the Dutch East Indies forty years ago, surrendering only after a seaplane had bombed it and killed 22 men.

Jail terms of mutinous officers were shortened but the prisoners understand their ranks would not be restored.

The Duke of Kent here to attend the wedding, also among a group of royal visitors entertained last night with amateur movies Bernhard has made since the engagement to Juliana last summer.

Other Juliana Picks Bride's Dress, Bouquet

London, the Netherlands, Jan. 6 (AP)—The other Juliana who was born the same days and years as the Dutch Crown Princess and who, since among all other Dutch girls, will be most interested in her bridal dress and bouquet today:

Juliana Van Deupmeer, who will become the bride of Boatman Martin Van Stein while the Crown Princess is the bride of Bernhard in The Hague, will wear a dark blue gown and a corsage of artificial flowers. Her hat will be of violet to match her dress; no shoes will be black.

Plump like the Princess, "the other Juliana" completed new pots and pans today for her new apartment cottage and blushed at queries about the size of the house.

But Martin was quick and proud.

"It is for children. Marriage without children would not be marriage. How many? A whole lot."

Juliana clattered a pan and demurred.

"Maybe not as many as that."

The newlyweds are going to move into the cottage as soon as the wedding reception is finished at Oegstgeest Village, nearby. There is not money for a honeymoon.

Martin will go back to work on the canals of Holland with his little boat, trading in vegetables and things.

The present Juliana is the only Netherlands girl whose marriage will be permitted on the princess' wedding day.

She, 27, and Martin, 31, have been waiting six years for the day.

Juliana Must "Honor, Obey, Fear" Her Husband

The Hague, Jan. 6 (AP)—Details for the marriage of Crown Princess Juliana and Prince Bernhard Zu Lippe-Biesterfeld tomorrow were kept secret on the Queen's orders, but it was learned she personally had arranged for the music and hymns.

Two court chaplains will officiate, the court pastor and the 85-year-old retired court chaplain who was Juliana's religious teacher.

As the bridal couple enters the church the organ will play Mendelssohn's "Song of Praise," just as when Juliana's mother and father were married in the same church in 1901.

The ceremonial terms the institution of marriage as God's will and speaks of the first of all marriages, that of Adam and Eve.

According to the rites, the pastor will inform the husband-to-be of Holland's future ruler that the man heads the family, that he must work for bread to support his wife and children.

The woman, the crown princess is told, must honor, obey and fear her husband because he is the mastery of her family and his mission. Told, because Adam was created first and Eve was created from his rib.

The new royal couple then will walk in the vestry to receive congratulations, before returning to palace for the wedding breakfast.

BIG '35 SALARIES REVEALED BY U. S.

Washington, Jan. 6 (INS)—Mae West, for the second time topped all other feminine movie stars in 1935 earnings as revealed in the annual Treasury department compilation of salaries, which was made public by the House Ways and Means committee under a mandatory law.

During 1935, the list showed today, Mae West received $480,833 from 20th Century-Fox. Second best of her women rivals in this field was Marlene Dietrich, whose compensation totaled $406,666.

The salary list, including all corporations reporting, an annual task of the treasury department, fairly runs crowding the movie stars for top salary honors. But Gary Cooper, male leader, was paid $240,272 as an offsetting agency for Miss West, while Bing Crosby, who was paid $240,248 by the same company, stage and radio apparently netted Major Edward Bowes about $200,000.

VOICES PROTEST

Chairman Doughton (D), of North Carolina, of the ways and means committee, made public the salary list with regret.

"I should be glad to see the law repealed," said Doughton, "but under the law the salaries must be made public. I did not think it ought to be done when it was written into the tax law at the insistence of the senate."

A wide range of salaries in industrial concerns, which rarely have been made public in reports of the Security Exchange Commission, was revealed. Many executives, it is learned in business circles, pay substantial salaries to their wives as secretaries.

Most salaries, the report revealed, were down 5 to 10 per cent during 1935, but salary increases, in some instances, were apparently the rule among those earning huge sums, reporting showed that Charlie Chaplin, Pasadena, Calif., general manager of the Los Angeles Rams, received $117,520. Robert Tyre Jones, famous Atlanta golfer, received $19,992 from A. G. Spalding and Bros. Carl Hubbell, star New York Giants pitcher, received $17,500, and his player, manager, Bill Terry, received $27,500.

CHAPLIN $520,000

Shirley Temple, the highest paid young actress in motion picture shows to have received $66,000. Bette Davis, another radio salaries outstripped the latter. Among the highest paid singers of the Metropolitan Opera Ezio Pinza, both Rethberg with $25,000, and Lawrence Tibbett with $15,772. The artists presumably also engaged in radio and concert work.

Among the higher paid motion picture stars in 1935 were:

Charlie Chaplin, $260,000; Gary Cooper, $217,000; Warner Baxter, $176,000; Harold Lloyd, $170,000; Fred Astaire $127,000; Stan Laurel, $100,000; and his teammate, Oliver Hardy, $93,333. Eddie Cantor, $150,000; Katharine Hepburn, $121,572; Irene Dunne, $208,005; Bing Crosby, $218,907; Herbert Marshall, $183,000; Carole Lombard, $156,085; Jack Oakie, $101,623; Margaret Sullavan, $103,421; Ginger Rogers, $74,443; William Powell, $66,666; George Burns and Gracie Allen, $92,000; Ann Harding, $93,750; George Raft, $80,000; Charles Ruggles, $73,000; Charles Boyer, $106,278; Gladys Swarthout, $101,858.

Since the salary lists of some motion picture companies operating studios in Los Angeles have included earnings of many stars may have been increased by engagements with them.

The late Will Rogers reported income during 1935, the last year of his life, as $234,000.

WINCHELL, JOLSON

Among the radio stars receiving large sums from one advertising agency were:

Walter Winchell, $17,500; Al Jolson, $78,200; Joe Penner, $69,500; Victor Young, $58,701; Sigmund Romberg, $65,905; and Irving Prosser, $51,871.

Among the larger salaries in the automobile field were: Alfred P. Sloan, head of General Motors, $474,305. Within the same group radians the Fisher brothers, Alfred, Edward Lawrence and William, divided equally among themselves $600,000 for services.

Walter P. Chrysler, chairman of the Chrysler corporation, received $185,845, while Edsel B. Ford, president of the Ford Motor Company, received $46,876.

In the publishing field salaries and bonuses were reported, with Ivan Randolph Hearst, $221,377 for health; Publisher of St. Louis and $100,000 for the late Arthur Brisbane.

In the field of sports, reported from sporting showed that Charlie Grimm, Pasadena, Calif., general manager of the Los Angeles baseball team, received $17,520. Tyra Jones, famous Atlanta golfer, received $19,992 from A. G. Spalding and Bros. Carl Hubbell, star New York Giants pitcher, received $17,500, and his player, manager, Bill Terry, received $27,500.

'Oak Falls' Life as It Moves on Boston Stage

EXCLUSIVE!

Six related scenes, snapped at Plymouth Theater, where (above) George M. Cohan, as Ed Fulton, chides his stage daughter with: "Your mother is the finest woman in the world." The daughter, Betty Fulton, played by Francesca Lenni, has quarreled with mother over going out nights.

In scene above: Fulton of Oak Falls tries another tack. There are many dangers in running around nights, he warns, and Betty must remember her good name. There are gossips and busybodies and wagging tongues. Dad Fulton glances cornerwise to see how daughter is taking this, but it's still no soap. Versatile as only a George M. Cohan character can be, Dad switches again (center, below) and asks: "Are you and Harry engaged? I'll keep a secret if you want me to." Daughter's consciousness is pierced at last and she bends. Says Dad (right, below): "Now that's a good girl. Go in and apologize to your mother."

Now Dad (top center) tries softness. "I'll bet," he says, "there's many a young girl sneaking out of the house at night to keep a date." And then (top, right): "Of course I know you don't do a thing like that. You have too much common sense." But daughter remains unmoved.

Starlings Best 'Deal' Wise Owls

Washington, Jan. 6 (AP)—Chief Boy R. Lanham, mumbling nonsense about a couple of owls today and wondered if President Roosevelt would have to listen to the chatter of starlings on inaugural day.

Starlings are little birds that run in flocks and specialize in choral static. Lanham is the District of Columbia superintendent of trees.

He has tried to scare the birds out of town with all kinds of devices. The starlings still live along Pennsylvania avenue.

As inauguration day approached, Lanham faced a crisis. He borrowed a couple of owls from the zoo. He tied them on a ledge under the eves of the district building where the starlings are thickest. The starlings were supposed to be scared.

When Lanham came back, the owls were looking sad, and a couple of starlings were perched on the ledge next to them chattering at the top of their lungs.

Seamen to Charge Coercion on Ship

New York, Jan. 6—Members of the crew of the steamer Challenger, of the American South African line, here from Boston, will file charges they were taken from Boston against their will, striking seamen said today.

They asserted that when they refused to man the vessel, having learned of the seamens strike on the Atlantic coast, the ship was taken out of Boston harbor by tugs and let adrift.

BOSTON FOLK WINNERS

$665 Shared by 12 on Headlines

Twelve residents of Boston and vicinity shared $665 in cash awards today when the Van Camp Sea Food Company announced the winners in its "headline hunt" contest.

Four women captured all but one of the top $100 prizes. The $500 winners were:

Fifty dollars each was won by:

Helen J. Johnson, 29 Cohasset street, Roslindale; Mrs. A. H. Richardson, Brook road, Billerica.

Twenty-five dollars was won by Emile F. Steensen, 30 Capen street, Milton.

The $10 winners are:

Eleanor B. Fenn, Fenn School, Concord; Helen Frost, Box 184, Rockport; Mildred Hume, 20 Chestnut street, Clinton; Mrs. W. E. Davis, 86 Sargent street, Melrose.

Mass Drowning Fears Dispelled

West Springfield, Jan. 6—Fear of a mass drowning when skaters broke through the ice at Piper Reservoir ended today after police spent several hours grappling for bodies without success and could find missing persons in a telephone canvass of the city.

Nearly a score of young men and women were plunged into the waters of the reservoir when a section of ice almost 20 feet square broke under their weight.

Dandelion Found In Marblehead

A bright golden dandelion blossom occupied a place of honor today on the dining table of Mrs. Albert S. Reed, of Marblehead.

She picked it on her lawn, but couldn't quite make her mind whether it was a harbinger of early spring or a holdover from late autumn.

Potato Robbery Case Continued

Greenfield, Jan. 6—The case of John Jeffries of Troy, N. Y., fourth of a group of men who allegedly stole 100 bags of potatoes last October, has been continued for hearing to January 15.

BOSTON after DARK

By GEORGE HOLLAND

GEORGE HOLLAND

THE SO-CALLED "SMART MONEY" is planning a wholesale exodus from Boston toward the South . . . Never a "wide-open town," Boston has become suddenly a whistle-stop for the lads who like action . . . Many of "the boys" are putting their cars in storage, or steering them toward Florida in the belief that night-driving is becoming unsafe . . . The highways are cluttered with "prowl cars," they say, and collisions are inevitable . . . Moreover, headlines seem to disturb the peace of mind of the ordinary citizens or "working stiffs" . . . They keep to their fireides and radio-rooms when one "clean-up drive" follows another . . . The theaters are not feeling the slump in business so much . . . They are attracting about as much patronage as their various shows deserve . . . The night-clubs and hotel dancing rooms are suffering, and, in spite of the surge of new prosperity, this post-New Year's week has found business worse than last year . . . At least, that is the response to a canvass made last night of five of the major gay-spots . . . Four or five live spenders can boost the night's receipts of a cabaret more than five-dozen celebrants who are paying the minimum charge and ordering accordingly . . . There wasn't a single bottle of wine opened in four of the five night-clubs interviewed by the oversigned last night . . . One reason is, that the big spenders are "the boys" . . . When their income dries up, they retire to their suites or palaces, and give themselves up to plans, regrets or mutterings . . .

Two Wishes:

One of the town's best ear-benders was going on high last night. He took pause to inflict himself on a neighboring table when one of his annoyed listeners said to the other victim:

"They should give that guy back to the Indians!"

"Yeah, to the Mohicans," his fellow-victim agreed. "There aren't any more of those."

Once Over Lightly:

[illegible] Holy Cross-Red Sox pitcher, [illegible] Yale football coach Ducky Pond [illegible] Boston University's new $2,500,000 windfall has aroused [illegible] . . . He will meet all needs, [illegible] according to local commissioners, a Mr. Tingstorm from Hoosick . . . Norma Scott of Dorchester will be given an audition for one of the foremost radio hours . . .

Trouble is brewing over a proposed transfer of the late John W. Shube's lease at the airport . . . A. G. Curtis, former horse owner and reformed Brooklyn highroller, will find it safe enough to come to Boston. He writes to inquire is it true what they say — that you cannot place a bet . . . Four former owners of showplaces in the stage colony at Great Neck, L. I., are in Boston . . . They are George M. Cohan, Ernest Truex, Sam H. Harris and Dennis King . . . None of them live there any more . . . The most beautiful girl singing with an orchestra in Boston is Sue Morgan, the quiet young lady at the Waterfront Club, who decorates Pete Fitzgerald's bandstand . . . Her suit against a Boston theater in the discard, Barbara Belmore, the dancer, will return to the Cocoanut Grove . . .

Hildegarde, due at Keith's Boston tomorrow, is the girl Edward VIII mentioned as one of his favorite singers. She was to come at the coronation . . . "One in a Million," Sonja Henie's picture, has smashed five years of attendance records at the screen in New York . . . Sonja was a tremendous hit in Boston last year . . . Mayor Mansfield was quizzed this column that rumors that the Mayor has been chosen as a compromise candidate, to become a U. S. Senator are baseless . . . A strong block in the General Court, however, will try to put over a bill making it possible for the Mayor of Boston to succeed himself . . . Although this man wins the Mayor's support, the nominee was fought without his knowledge.

Laughter Along Broadway:

In opening a new burlesque house on Broadway, in the '50's, two of the Minsky brothers have advertised the theater as "operated by real, living Minskys" . . . This is to set the house apart from another burlesque emporium using the Minsky name through an arrangement with the widow of the late Billy Minsky . . . Variety's review of the opening (by Joe Bigelow) contains this acid paragraph about the opening show: "It was one of the 'real, living Minskys' who remarked some time ago, for the edification of all reviewers, that he 'didn't mind criticism so long as it was constructive.' The most constructive criticism possible for this affair would be that the producers try something else—like a burlesque show, for instance—and put this one on ice for next Thanksgiving's dinner."

All-Star Cast in Film

Those indestructible "pitchers" of Mr. Dinty Goss in Town" are coming to the Paramount and Fenway screens beginning tomorrow, in "Let's Make a Million," an all-star comedy with music. "College Holiday," recently seen here, is the companion picture.

Margaret Sullivan and Margaret McWade, the "genteelest sisters," play the maiden aunts of Edward Everett Horton, who has just received a fortune in "Let's Make a Million."

Boston wants to use the money to marry the beautiful secretary, Charlotte Wynters, but she must have dilapidated Horton and the pals he acquires when they pressed his pants, so they were without consulting Horton.

Others in the cast include Porter Hall, J. M. Kerrigan and Purnell Pratt. Ray McCarey directed.

Stars of "College Holiday" include your possible radio favorites, Jack Benny, George Burns and Gracie Allen, as well as Martha Raye, Martha Hill, Leif Erickson, Mary Boland, Johnny Downs, Eleanore Whitney and Ben Blue.

At the Olympia

"Hideaway Girl," featuring Martha Raye and Shirley Ross, comes to the Washington Street Olympia Sunday, together with the Twentieth Century-Fox production, "White Hunter," co-starring Warner Baxter and June Lang, directed by Allen Dwan. Walworth and Gail Patrick.

One Is a Famous Star; Other a Newcomer

Katharine Hepburn's "Jane Eyre" concludes its Boston run at the Colonial on Saturday night. The star's portrayal of the role has been widely acclaimed.

Charlotte Wynters, a newcomer to the screen, is featured in "Let's Make a Million," which opens at the Paramount and Fenway tomorrow.

Arnold Gets 'Victor Herbert' Lead

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS
Motion Picture Editor, Universal Service
Copyright, 1937, by Universal Service.

Los Angeles, Jan. 6—They will put a mustache on Edward Arnold and hand him the role of Victor Herbert at Paramount in "The Life of Victor Herbert."

Come to think of it, Herbert was much the same build and not unlike Arnold in appearance. This movie, based on the life of the composer and incorporating much of his famous music, will be one of Para's important 1937 offerings.

And you may be sure the Victor Herbert music will be sung with feeling and understanding because Gladys Swarthout will sing and play the femme starring role. She has signed a new contract with Para and "The Life of Victor Herbert" is the first picture she'll make after the New Year schedule. We are glad Gladys and her husband, Frank Chapman, have elected to remain in Hollywood because they are a welcome addition to our town—and real folks.

For the seventh time, Clarence Brown will direct the great Garbo when he megaphones "Countess Waleska" due to go into production within two weeks. This star-director association started in the silent days when she and John Gilbert were the great romance in moviedom and his first picture with her was "Flesh and the Devil." "Waleska" precedes "A Woman of Spain," and will not only have Charles Boyer as co-star, but Maria Ouspenskaya in one of the featured roles. She is the founder of the school in New York which bears her name.

Rosa Alexander's suicide was such a tragic thing, and so unnecessary, for Rosa was getting happy in his marriage with Anne Nagel in spite of the rumors he was secretly grieving for his first wife, who died by her own hand a year ago. Jack Warner told me he considered Rosa the most promising young actor on the lot next to Errol Flynn, and Warner Brothers had most ambitious plans for him this year. Stardom was definitely ahead for him and he was never better than in "Ready, Willing and Able," his last picture. Hollywood's heart goes out in deepest sympathy to little Anne Nagel, who is so bewildered over the cause of this tragedy.

Film Held At Park

"Damaged Lives," sensational motion picture of young love, is being held over for the third week at the Park Theater.

The film tells the story of how the partners of a successful young man was nearly wrecked because of a nefarious affair.

Co-featured is "The Morals of Marcus," starring Lionel Velez, supported by Don Hunter and Noel Maddison. It is a sparkling comedy, beautifully presented, in which Miss Velez sings two songs.

Leisure to Repent

By Ursula Parrott

CHAPTER THIRTY

In the dark driving on, Felicia's shoulder beside him carefully not touching his, memory came to him of driving beside Denise, in the dark, just a few days before her wedding, in air colder than this soft air. Even, he could remember some of their words:

She had said: "I was pretending, Keith, that there were no minutes beyond these minutes."

He had said: "Go on pretending, dearest. Why not?"

He thought of the autumn, and he thought of the winter, and Felicia in a long chair on a terrace in Bermuda, a moonlit terrace overlooking a dark sea, when he had said to Felicia of Hollywood: "She won't come back. I was a fool to dream she would!"

And then he had said: "You and I remain."

Had he believed that while that night he dreamed? Whether he had believed that then or not, it had come true. He was now remarried.

He did miss the broad-shouldered little blonde. He used to bounce in a good-humored manner, and he had been ill or had been telling the truth to Denise. "You must be always sure, because it's so true that it's you I love."

Rain beating against his open car. Rain beating against his heart.

He thought: "When we get to London, I must convince Esther of the same thing."

And keep Felicia away all the long years, which would be hard, at first.

"I promise me you'll take care of Felicia!"

Yes, he could keep that promise now. There was nothing, now, left. Restless living had driven so many people safe to Felicia's feet.

When Felicia and Keith were out of that drawing-room, it seemed to Gilbert that several things had to be done about them, but he extremely resented the necessity.

There stood Denise, and there was arrived a moment for which he had waited for months. It seemed, in retrospect, endless. And yet—curious—one of the things he learned from that, if he watched at the moment, he watched only Denise.

He and gentle, tactful Gilbert Denise'll come on later to see you." And Keith's voice, in the practical details of sending a maid to help Felicia pack, had a man to Keith, of the ease of a boulder to be filled with gaiety and life.

Keith gone, downstairs from Gilbert offered him a highball and cigarettes, asked him if he would like to send a phone call, a cable. Keith said no to the highball, said yes to the cigarette, and gratefully accepted a match. He smoothly eased to where a big significant conversation-piece lay open, and began to discuss the fine points of the Gilbert Windon collection.

"I'm taking her to Dorchester House. My father's there. You can reach us through him in case her parents—"

They Part

Gilbert said: "Thanks." He was glad to know. Heal forgot, too, that he yet had to give Denise a summary of the evening. He wouldn't be pressed for time.

Rising, Denise said: "Well, Gilbert. Now to have seen you on the precise brink of your life, leaving a house where jews and tea. Who would have dreamed it?"

He had never felt more inadequate in his life. Acutely he disliked her, and, except for her, Denise, probably would not be waiting for him now.

Gilbert was surprised at his relief. No, he did not want to see his wife now. He had waited so long to be rewed that he could wait still. If she would only tell him, when the waiting was done, that she wanted to live her life with him.

He kept that night the dreamed sleep of exhaustion, and woke late, to a bright morning. When he was dressed he strolled to Denise's door.

She was having breakfast in bed, her bright hair tousled, her eyes sleepy, as he had seen her many times. Although at that time, she said: "This is like Russia, Gilbert. Where shall we go sightseeing today?"

"On the docks, to walk in miles."

"And take what the cook calls disappearingly, 'an Amurrican panic lunch.' I'll be dressed in 10 minutes, Gilbert."

He went downstairs. From here on he had been able to tell himself what he would say. That was all. Suppose supper, after all, now that she was free of Keith and Felicia, she might want to be free from him too, and discover what she desired by herself.

His heart stopped a beat. Then he told himself: "This time, I shan't try to hold her if she wants to go. Because she's tried."

He waited restlessly, almost through the ground-floor rooms, when he realized he was in the smallest receptionroom.

In the smallest receptionroom he found a portrait of her in a black lace dress. He thought: "Keith Sheldie. It's to be his painted here for his study. Not painting all his love."

Picture of a young woman just flowered into beauty; her mouth, her eyes smiling a little, as Denise smiled when she was vaguely happy and unhurried. It was her very self.

The strongest desire came to her husband that there on canvas, smiling a little forever, was all that remained of the Denise who had loved Keith Sheldie: that the girl upstairs was already another person.

She came running down the corridor to him, in a gray tweed skirt and white pullover, hatless.

Gilbert smiled at her as he remarked:

"Sometimes, Denise, you look about 16 years old. It's startling, when one is expecting an adult to appear."

"Don't worry. It's an illusion. I'm old for my age, really. Let's go find Mother and Father, and tell them we're gone all day."

She was standing—not turning her eyes to the portrait—and when she observed Gilbert, growing still, she flushed a little.

"It's a nice thing, Denise."

"Yes, better painting than anything I ever saw of his. But I don't want it, now."

"Better keep it. You needn't hang it mother."

"Will, what, Gilbert?"

"I'll tell some day you only think of it as a good painting."

Gilbert was serious. They went out into the garden, to talk to her father and mother, who appeared at ease, a bustle and worried sitting there in the bright sunlight that his heart ached with pity. He could tell that they took trouble Denise, for she took great pains to be gay while there, to make her mama feel reassuring, and succeeded sufficiently so that they were smiling by the time.

They walked a long way, speaking to each other of some trivial matter, and then, without warning their faces of nothing beyond the moment, the sunlight upon them, the salt air against their cheeks. They moved in a field in the downs by a deep pond, a mood upon them such as they had never before.

When they came near home, the shadows were long across the lawn, and it had already frosh was rising when her husband, tagged, he asked: "Tired, Denise?"

"No really. I could walk on forever in this horse-breeding. It slows away so many things, did foolish intensities and bitterness."

"What does it leave?"

"The feeling of being glad to be alive. Poor Esther!"

"I don't think he would have wanted his much without Felicia."

"I don't know. Maybe. I shouldn't care about the sun and the clear wind without him."

Soon after that, when the tea-some came in the sun, the tea-some came in the sun, the "Good-by, Esther, whom I tried very much! Good-by, Keith and Felicia, whom I loved, and all the restless hurry and unhappy when I knew you!" A person a good-by, Gilbert, and a little—

Gilbert quietly breakfasted. She would be ready when he turned and smiled at him over the coffee.

"Denise," Gilbert said after a moment, "you said once that you wanted to know what you wanted."

"Yes, Gilbert."

"Do you know?"

"Yes, Gilbert." She was laughing now.

"Tell me."

"It will take a long time to tell you."

Her eyes stopped, soon, and moved up at him, her gaze grave. He looked at her without reading her.

"Do we have a long time, Denise?"

Gilbert was surprised at his relief. No, he did not want to see his wife now. He had waited so long to be rewed that he could wait still. If she would only tell him, when the waiting was done, that she wanted to live her life with him.

"Do we have a long time, Denise?"

Together Always

She repeated his words—"A long time. All the years. To be kind, even to be a little useful if possible, and always to love each other."

She held up a face slaughter-serene for his kiss. He put his arms right-end round her shoulder, she remembered. He thought: "A child who said said, after a minute that might have been like and said: "End of Denise Rendale and Keith Sheldie."

"Denise, that never was wait far, far beyond remembering, down the river mist, where never quite know, any more than you did, why we left."

"This is the beginning, really, of Denise and Gilbert Windon."

"Yes." Her voice was a little that something to their first wedding journey. They were going to New York, furnishing a house.

"A house," she said, "not a penthouse. I don't know exactly why."

Denise Felicia and Keith were living in Maryland, she never saw them, and was anxious to conduct of Gilbert's life. Gilbert was curious.

"Why does anyone want a house, when a penthouse is so much easier?"

She said thought: "I want a house. A house is much more fun for children."

She the morning of her wedding anniversary, her husband waited her by saying: "Denise, darling—we've been married a year now—the trial year you wanted. And I suppose we did marry in relative haste, so you've had your leisure to repent. Tell me, have you repented?"

Why he asked was Gilbert waiting her to talk about repentance?

Slowly she replied: "Dearest dearest—moon hope returns; only that's for birthdays, isn't it?"

Then she waited fully understood what he had said, and laughed and said:

Halos Under Southern Sun

YOU'LL have to brave a sprinkling of freckles if you're to be fashionable in the South, and closer to home next summer. But the new halo hats are so devastating that they're worth a little precaution, like standing in the shade whenever you can! Among the striking bonnets for the southland that earned tags at the Fashion Congress is this midday blue navy felt, modeled by Miss Betty Stone. The halo is flat against the back of the head in a position that would be untenable before the least gust of wind . . . but its trick is the felt band that holds on snugly even while it so nicely outlines your widow's peak. Swathed around it are gold and blue ribbons. And if you're off the gold standard, you'd better get right on again, because gold is going to be tops in the spring and summer fashion scale. For shopping information on this hat, phone Annice Brink, Fashion Editor, LIBerty 4000, or write her at the Boston Evening American.

WEIGHT LOSS CAN'T BE REGULATED!

By IDA JEAN KAIN

NOTHING in the world thing first can happen on a reducing diet. If you store water as you lose weight, you may have nothing to show for your week of reducing—but at the same time you may have lost weight.

Weight loss cannot be regulated. You may lose rapidly the first week of dieting, or you may not lose a pound for 10 to 16 days, regardless of a continued low calorie diet.

Science has proved beyond all doubt that the displacement of fat by water frequently retards reduction or lowered weight. The extent to which water storage may become a factor in weight loss is shown by these examples:

Dr. E. F. DuBois, eminent authority on metabolism, says that due to replacement of lost fat by water, a normal person may even gain weight while on a reducing diet. He cited the case of a patient whose weight remained unchanged, although according to a calculated energy output he actually lost 7½ pounds of fat. The loss in fat was balanced by an equal gain in water.

Newburgh, of the University of Michigan, has conducted numerous experiments proving conclusively that water retention is a common factor in reducing. A young woman on a supervised diet showed absolutely no loss for a period of two weeks, although a comparison of calorie intake with energy output revealed that she had burned six pounds of body fat.

During the next two weeks, however, on the same diet, she lost a total of nine pounds, only three and one-half of which could be attributed to energy expenditure. The other five and one-half pounds had been previously lost, but water retention had delayed its registration on the scales.

SO DON'T LET SCALES DISCOURAGE YOU

Send for the "Calorie Chart" leaflet and check your food intake. Enclosed stamped addressed envelope.

MARIAN MARTIN PATTERN 9175

They'll ask you what you've been doing to make yourself look so young, slim, and pretty—when you don this dainty Marian Martin "at home" style! You'll find that never before have you looked as charming in any model as you do in Pattern 9175—fetching wash frock of cotton with brightest of accents.

There's special chic to the pointed yoke, livened with a crisp frill and dainty jaunty buttons, and see how the fetching gathered sleeve repeats those gay notes! Slim 'n' trim is the straight-line skirt, fitted at the waistline by cleverly placed tucks and nipped in by a narrow adjustable sash that ties in a jaunty bow in back.

Pattern 9175 may be ordered only in sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46 and 48. Size 36 requires 3¾ yards 36 inch fabric and 1¼ yards ruffling.

Send your order to Boston Evening American, Pattern Department, 232 West 18th street, New York, N. Y.

Send 15 cents in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for each Marian Martin pattern. Be sure to write plainly your size, name, address, and style number.

Don't Solve OPPONENT'S Bridge PROBLEMS

By JOSEPHINE CULBERTSON

The ability to put oneself in the "place of the other fellow," and thus to visualize the difficulties that must beset him is an indispensable quality of an expert.

In today's hand, the declarer recognized a defender's problem—and did not gallantly solve it for him, as so many players habitually do.

North, dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.
North-South 40 part-score.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
Pass	Pass	6♢	Pass
Pass	Pass

South's extraordinary opening bid was not really so bad as it appears, when one considers his reason. He was paired with a very weak player and throughout the evening had been making very unorthodox bids. He remembered that North had commented on these bids, and now felt that if he were to open properly with a two bid on a 40 score, North would be apt to smile wisely and pass, on the theory that South (who) was trying another "phoney."

Thus, with his powerhouse South determined to give North no option, and indeed he was justified in thinking that if he bucked up any honor in hearts, diamonds or clubs he would have an excellent play for the contract.

West was faced with a horrible problem on the opening lead. Holding an honor in every suit, it was a sheer guess on his part as to which to jeopardize. His choice of a diamond, while unfortunate, cannot be justly criticized. Declarer won the opening lead with the Jack, and laid down three top hearts, on the second and third of which East discarded diamonds.

Declarer now had a certain way of throwing West on lead (with the Jack of hearts), but before doing so he very wisely took the precaution of extracting West's exit cards in diamonds. He laid down the Ace and King, and then, not even bothering to cash his last diamond, threw West in with a trump.

Now West was really "up against it": his spade and club holdings were equal, and so were dummy's, and thus if was a sheer guess as to whether he should lead from the spade or club King. Obviously, the spade would have been if since declarer's Ace was blank, but, with no way to tell, he made an unfortunate guess and returned a club, thus clinching the contract.

Had declarer failed to take out West's diamonds before throwing him on lead, obviously West would have chosen the comparatively safe exit of a diamond.

Smart Attire For Small Wedding

SMALL WEDDING

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

Because of several reasons, my parents will not attend my wedding ceremony. Therefore I am somewhat at a loss as to how I should go about it. It will not be possible to hold a reception afterward, and I would like to leave the city immediately after the wedding.

1. Would it be proper to have a small wedding, and for me to wear either a suit or travelling dress? Then I could leave the church right away.

2. Would it be better taste to have only my brothers and my sister and my intended husband's parents and have none of my friends? I have many friends who would like to see me married, but because of both finances and family troubles, I am at a loss to know what to do. MARY.

1. Yes, this will not only be proper, but will be, under the circumstances, in the best of taste.

2. Since you are having a church wedding, even though so informal, I see no reason why you should not give yourself the joy of having your friends with you at the ceremony, and of giving them the joy of being with you. Since you are having no reception, the question of finances will not enter into this plan, since the church ceremony expenses will be the same even if you include a few more guests. But I think that it would be best not to make your list too inclusive . . . just your very close friends.

(Mrs. Beeckman will be glad to answer questions on Good Manners submitted by readers.)

Diphtheria Menace Can Easily Be Controlled

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.

RECENTLY the commissioner of health of New York city warned parents about the need of immunizing against diphtheria every child under the age of six years.

This warning was issued in view of a sudden increase in the number of diphtheria cases. With a great population there is no general menace in a slight and temporary increase.

It must be admitted that every home faces the possibility of diphtheria. It is a menace that is ever present. Yet, the disease could be completely eradicated if every family made use of known means of prevention.

It is difficult to understand why anyone should willingly subject a child to the danger of diphtheria when every child can be definitely guarded against it.

Few other diseases can be as easily controlled as diphtheria. Yet it continues to be a public health problem. This is explained by the fact that some families are avoiding immunization either because they regard it as a fad or because they remain in ignorance of its many advantages.

TOXOID IS URGED

Diphtheria can definitely be prevented by the administration of what is called the diphtheria "toxoid." This substance is injected into the arm once a week for three weeks. It builds up an immunization or protection against the germs of the disease. This is a simple and harmless procedure. There is little, if any, pain associated with the injection. We rarely hear of any unpleasant reaction following the administration of the toxoid.

To make assurance doubly sure, there is now available a further check against diphtheria. I refer to the so-called "Schick test". The child who has received the toxoid should be given this test. It determines for a certainty whether or not desirable protection has actually been accomplished.

This test is made six months after the last inoculation with the toxoid. It shows whether the child has built up the necessary resistance. Usually the test is satisfactory, but if not, more inoculations are required.

If these measures were universally followed, few children would be exposed to the dangers of diphtheria. In those communities where this measure of safety is enforced, diphtheria rarely occurs. Let us co-operate with the local board of health in a determined effort to wipe out this disease.

PATTERN 1380

COME into the Kitchen! Watch the Wooden Soldiers parading just for you!

You'll want to embroider their gayly-uniformed figures on a set of seven tea towels, for they're veritable "Minute Men" with the dishes.

They're done in 8-to-the-inch crosses, while their "firearms" (everything from scissors and cutlery to a broomstick) are in outline stitch. Pattern 1380 contains a transfer pattern of six motifs averaging 5⅞x6½ inches; details of all stitches used; material requirements; and color suggestions.

Send 10 cents in stamps or coin (coin preferred) for this pattern to Boston Evening American, Needlecraft Dept., 82 Eighth avenue, New York, N. Y. Write plainly pattern number, your name and address.

'Habitual Drunks' Often Cured by Prompt and Proper Treatment

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX

My husband has begun to stay away nights, and is usually intoxicated when he arrives home. Of course, there is a woman in the case, and when I love my husband dearly he is so interested in this other party that there seems to be no room for me in his heart.

We have two very sweet children and I am still young. I am a good housekeeper and the home my husband now gives me, and the children and I are always properly dressed.

Yes, I have had many admirers, but to me they meant absolutely nothing, as I love always have truly devoted to my husband.

But now I am almost tempted to listen to those other men, because I have been so badly treated. I never nag, though sometimes am [illegible]

NEW Struggle for POWER IN AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

By MERRYLE STANLEY RUKEYSER
Copyright, 1937, by Universal Service

New York, Jan. 6—The new struggle for power in the automotive industry focusses attention, as an interesting by-product, on seniority as a criterion for promotion in business.

As a concession to the brotherhoods, the railroads have long followed the seniority rule.

On the other hand, the free and hitherto untrammeled automobile industry has made fitness for the job the test.

Now that the automobile union has proposed the seniority rule based upon the length of service as one of its major demands, the question is lifted above the "plane of the mere academic."

From the opposite, several thoughts occur which point the way to a solution.

It seems to me that, though the primary test for a worker must be efficiency, the employer, as a matter of policy, should be willing to consider seniority wherever other factors are equal.

It does not take much imagination to recognize the magnificent strides of the automobile industry, compared with the retarded progress in the railroads. Obviously, among other factors leading, the seniority rule were imposed, its interference on the size of advancement beyond set orders has a deadening, restraining influence on business.

Great gains are made in the business of securing popular living standards through the intervention of science and invention. Science and invention respect no rigid age scheduling. In the realm of credit, much sought is forever crashing through with youth passing the winning post. By the same token, the laboratory is no discriminator against age. Experience is enormously valuable to the scientist.

One great industrial executive, in summing up the merits of this discussion, once remarked to me:

"I prefer the courage of youth to the fears of advanced age."

The spirit of youth—open-mindedness and a zest for progress—that is characteristic of American way of life, and should be perpetuated.

Quite apart from trades union demands, American life is faced with some potential strains in the direction of a result of the tendency of the average age of the population in the United States to become older.

This increasing average age will have a marked effect on the cost of social insurance, and will, may perhaps have an effect on the notion of American life.

Increased longevity, as a result of improvement in medical science, is a major goal of the activities of the science age of the population. Increased longevity, as a result of improvement in medical science, is a major goal of the activities of the science age of the population. Increased longevity, as a result of improvement in medical science, is a major goal of the activities of the science age of the population.

Apart from the merits of technicalities involved in current disputes, it is part of the American creed that the automobile industry has been a symbol of the finest quality of American business ability. It has been beyond what was economically conceived possible as a result of the determination to all persons to participate in improving the status of each wage-earning one price.

This has meant, perpetually, emphasis on efficiency and more efficiency. On the other hand, it has not, spiritual low wages. On the contrary, it has led the way in greatly raising minimum daily wage standards, and the rest of the industry followed suit.

For the rank of all business to the automobile industry in leading the way out of the worst depression should not be overlooked. It initiated a beneficent spiral of recovery, and any setback to the industry would have reverberations throughout the American economic fabric.

In spite of chronic expressions of opposite, it is absurd to doubt that labor and management in the automobile industry will be able to compose their differences.

HANEY ON LABOR

Public Sentiment WILL NOT SUPPORT 'Sit Down' Strikes

By LEWIS HANEY
Professor of Economics, New York University

New York, Jan. 6—There are two things that eight out of ten Americans accept.

One is that we want to keep out of European wars.

The other is that we want no collectivism and regimentation, whether in the form of Communism or Fascism.

This is why I am confident that public sentiment will not favor the committee for industrial organization led by Lewis, or the "sit down" strikes in "key plants" which that radical organization is starting.

The Lewis crowd stand for labor dictatorship, for labor class warfare and, therefore, for entanglement with class warfare in other countries as we see illustrated in Spain.

* * *

The significance of strike collective bargaining is what we need to understand.

To my mind, collective bargaining means four things, none of which is in agreement with C. I. O. methods.

First, collective bargaining means that employes, as a group, bargain with their employer. They thus gain similar power to bargain.

The employer can get along without any one employe, but he must pay attention to the arguments of the whole group.

Of course, it follows that there must be a spirit of give and take on both sides.

It also follows that the area or scope of operations covered must not be so great and varied that employers and employes cannot really get together.

Second, collective bargaining means that all employes are represented in the bargaining process and that the bargain is accepted by all. When a minority group undertakes to force the will of its "leader" on their fellow employes, as well as on the employer, there is no true collective bargaining.

Third, collective bargaining is justified and socially beneficial only when it is a means of summing up and expressing free individual choices.

Another way of putting the same idea is to say that collective bargaining must tend toward a true determination of the value of labor, or wages.

Let us take and example.

When a group of employes in a given plant, democratically (and, of course, without any dictator) decide that it is not worth while to work in that plant under existing wages or conditions their representative tells the employer so.

The employer then explains his own troubles. The men, however, are not convinced, and strike.

The employer then figures things out and decides that there is as little in the business for capital and enterprise that he might as well quit. He prepares to close down.

It then develops that, outside the striking group, there are so many competent men who really want to work at the existing wages that it would be easy to fill the strikers' places. In this case, society finds that the work is worth while.

If, however, no employes are available, and the plant is dismantled, society finds that the work was not worth while!

* * *

Of course, all this assumes that (1) the choices are freely and intelligently made, on both sides, and that (2) the desires and opinions of all interested parties are represented.

You may say that such assumptions are not in accord with facts. My reply is, let us make conditions such that free, intelligent individual choices, democratically summed up, will be the fact.

But above all, let us not abandon hope and fall back on labor dictatorships we would then have no assurance at all that wages represented the value of labor.

* * *

Fourth, collective bargaining cannot work where there is monopoly. This goes for employer as well as employe.

In the present case, the "sat-down" strike in "key plants" is a combination of the "sympathetic strike" and the "general strike."

The glass and accessory strikes are a sort of "sympathetic" strike. Beside that, they are designed to tie up the whole industry and would sadly spread to all industry. That is what the C. I. O. tactics would lead to eventually.

This indicates how labor monopoly is involved.

* * *

Congress is in session. Our representatives should at once take steps to bring "sit-down," "sympathetic" and "general" strikes under social control.

They should study the British trades dispute act and adapt it to our situation.

Wholesale automotive supply dealers increased their business 24 per cent over August, 1935.

Sales of wholesale electrical goods registered a 20 per cent increase, and shoes and other footwear increased nearly 18 per cent.

RUBBER Shares Take HONORS

BEST SHOWING FOR 1936

By LESLIE GOULD
International News Service
Financial Writer

New York, Jan. 6—In the bull market of 1936, honors on the upside go to the rubber shares, while the can stocks have undisputed claim for the prize for the poorest market showing.

The rubber shares as a group have appreciated 91 per cent in market value in the 12 months, while the can stocks have suffered a loss of 16.5 per cent.

Here's the way various stock groups performed last year, the figures in the right hand column showing the percentage gain or loss on the year. The groups are listed in the order showing.

1—Rubbers	91.0
2—Coppers	87.5
3—Automobile	84.0
4—Heat equipments	81.0
5—Railroads	67.1
6—Farm equipments	66.7
7—Sugars	60.6
8—Oils	56.5
9—Steel	50.5
10—Electrical equipments	49.0
11—Business	48.7
12—Mining	44.7
13—Mail Orders	44.5
14—Public Utilities	41.0
15—Airplanes	41.5
16—Chemicals	36.4
17—Amusement	34.1
18—Aviation corporations	28.2
19—Motors	22.5
20—Building	14.5
21—Communications	12.2
22—Food	3.1
23—Tobaccos	0.4
24—Gold and Silver	1.5
25—Textiles	2.0
26—Miscellaneous	3.1
27—Liquors	16.1
28—Can Shares	16.5

How well the buyers of stocks in the various groups listed above fared may be gauged from the fact that the Dow Jones industrial group as a whole shows a gain of only 30.6 per cent from Dec. 31 to Dec. 31, 1936.

Actually 18 of the above groups did better than that average. But on the other hand, 10 groups failed to do as well as the so-called general average. It is the latter group the public trades probably did buying, if precedents mean anything.

The showing of the motors and the motor accessory groups may be surprising to some, but those two groups did toward the end of the year by strike developments.

It is interesting to note that the motor industries are well represented in the upper flight—the railroad equipment stocks being up 81 per cent, the farm equipments 67.7 per cent, the steels 51 per cent, the electrical equipments 49 per cent and the building shares 46.8 per cent.

1st National Bank Shows Larger Earnings

Earnings of the First National Bank of Boston increased in 1936, reversing the previous trend, with a gain in loans and discounts, the latter method of a commercial bank, chiefly responsible for the improved showing.

Indicated earnings of First National Bank and Old Colony Trust Co. (latter wholly owned by stockholders of the former) were $4,470,820 in 1936, equal to $27.78 per share on the 225,000 shares of stock outstanding, compared with indicated earnings in 1935 of $5,050,485, equal to $25.61 per share, and with indicated earnings in 1934 of $6,594,486, equal to $2.96 per share.

In each of the three years the bank paid dividends of $2 per share, or $450,000. In 1936, undivided profits of the two institutions increased $1,623,334, or to $47,314,799 from $45,691,367. In 1935 the increase in those three items was $7,208,482 and in 1934 it was $2,344,486.

Dividends

North Boston Lighting Properties declared regular quarterly dividend of 75 cents a share on both common and preferred stocks, payable January 15 to stock of record January 7.

BOSTON EDISON

Many New RECORDS SET In 1936

By HUGH E. BRADSHAW

The preliminary survey of President Frank D. Comerford indicates that Boston Edison turned in a remarkable operating performance during the year just ended.

In almost every line of activity the company established new statistical records in 1936. The rise of production to a new all-time peak naturally is the highlight of Mr. Comerford's report.

Total output for the year exceeded 2 of power interchange was 1142 million kilowatt hours. This represented a gain of 73 per cent over the 1935 figure. Next in importance to the lay mind is the increase in Edison's customers. The 400,000 mark was passed at the close of 1936 and numbered 395,000, a gain of 5000 over the previous year. Similar records for home appliances and sales of appliances increased substantially the important news in that other petrol agreement year to year. Finally, the number built in Edison's territory during the year more than 50 per cent were equipped with electric ranges.

* * *

For the first time in years bank earnings are showing indications of reversing the downtrend. And in most instances this is without benefit of special earnings or the form of security depreciation year charge-offs or from portfolio bond sales and profits. Interest rates are responsible for the most part these earnings, the most part these coming from increased loans and discounts. Significant in the report statements now coming in daily. A continuation of this trend, even though not of the same degree, will undoubtedly result in further earnings improvement during 1937.

Notebook—Western Union has had a hard time of it marketwise during the last few months . . . However, disappointment over the failure of the company to get a wage slash for its employees should be assuaged with the thought that 1936 was the Western Union's workers' year . . . And 1937 might easily be the stockholders' year . . . Minneapolis Moline issues are finally displaying some of the kick we looked for months ago . . . Recent intersession flare-ups in utilities may portend a more vigorous movement before the month is out.

* * *

Stock prices rallied in approved fashion after meeting with support at higher levels. Whether or not it represents a reversal of form is not clear, although it is somewhat of a sign of good for a slight easing of Surprised be noted in the fact that the government will settle the motor strike situation sensitive be easy. Permanently and perfect set security conditions and perfect see more than has been shown to date before joining with those who are expecting prices to go skyward. In the final analysis, the market is going to be top of an upswing that got under way in March, 1935. There is nothing in the business or industrial picture to suggest that this upswing has run its course, but this will be disappointing progress.

Boardroom Briefs: While Douglas Aircraft definitely gave a negative signal by sliding under 70 there is possible support level to watch . . . It is between 67-68 and if buying in good volume appears there is further slide to the low 60's may be avoided . . . American Power & Light continues acts as though it is quite determined to climb up a level just under 20. Despite the many disappointments its following have suffered in past months . . . Motor Wheel has been down into a logical demand area between 20-22 . . . And should be capable of getting back to a price around 25 . . . Then its position should be again studied to see whether or not it can make 28-30.

A Magnificent Gift to American Art

THE rich contribution Andrew W. Mellon will make to the future of American art, in providing for a great national gallery, is incapable of adequate evaluation at this moment.

Future generations, perhaps, will better understand how badly the America of our day needed such a gift as an incentive to proper study and appreciation of the fine arts.

It is not possible to reduce the intrinsic value of Mr. Mellon's gift to monetary terms. His offer to build a gallery in Washington at a cost of ten million dollars, to house the permanent art treasures of the nation, is the only part of the project that may be defined in dollars.

His magnificent collection of art, which he will make the nucleus of the gallery, is beyond appraisal, as his gift itself is beyond praise. It is the greatest collection of classical paintings ever assembled by one man, and as such has no price.

MR. MELLON has devoted forty years of his life and many millions of dollars to enrichment of the nation through acquisition of art treasures. It was never his intention that his collection should be for the enjoyment of himself or his heirs alone. He visioned for America a national shrine of art, superior to the famous galleries of older countries which he frequently visited.

Part of his early vision was that other American collectors should join him in endowing a national gallery with their treasures. It can hardly be doubted that the patriotic example he has set will ultimately bear fruit in the manner he originally contemplated.

THE Mellon gift, acceptance of which has already been indicated by the government and which, indeed, is almost mandatory upon the nation, may well come to be acclaimed as the beginning of the most productive period in the history of American art.

The Future of Public Works

WITH recovery, there is an obligation for the Federal Government to taper off emergency expenditures.

When in 1931 the Hearst newspapers pioneered in urging an expanded public works program as a means of employing men who had been laid off by private employers, this was presented as a TEMPORARY EMERGENCY PROGRAM.

These newspapers then pointed out that with reemployment there must be a reduction in Federal expenditures.

By timing public works to overcome part of the slack in private employment, some of the worst effects on human welfare of intense swings in the business cycle can be mitigated.

REPORTING that the increase in public expenditures has served this purpose, Otis P. Mallery, of Philadelphia, in his wise report as chairman of the Public Works Committee of the American Association for Labor, emphasizes the importance of timing work projects.

He suggests that a skeleton organization be kept to plan public works for the next depression, but urges that current Federal projects be RIGOROUSLY CURTAILED.

"Effort should be made," Mr. Mallery admonishes, "to prevent a construction boom during the next three years. A boom is one of the principal causes of a depression. Public works should be progressively curtailed as private building rises.

"The national debt must be preserved by a conservative use of it in good times in order that it may be intact for a bold defense in bad times."

MR. MALLERY was right five years ago when he was clamoring for an expansion of public works.

At this juncture, he is correct again in demanding a reversal of this policy in recognition of the growing tempo of current recovery.

Many to Dance, Others Walk

SATURDAY, January 30, President Roosevelt adds another year to his life, and, celebrating with him, the nation will add many years to many lives.

Boston will celebrate with a Birthday Ball at Boston Garden on the evening of Friday, January 29. Thousands will attend. Other cities will conduct other balls on that night and the following night and other thousands will attend.

More than a million dollars will be raised to finance America's fight against one of America's worst enemies—infantile paralysis.

In every community where a ball is held, 70 per cent of the proceeds will be used locally and the remaining 30 per cent turned over to the National Committee on Research.

As Americans, regardless of party or political affiliation, let us all do our best to help others fight for health and happiness.

Let us all support the President's birthday celebration for a noble cause.

Gratitude Due Tour Judges

THE Roosevelt Inauguration Tour Competition has closed, nearly ten thousand entries examined, twenty winners chosen, and arrangements completed for the student Washington pilgrimage.

It is fitting today to extend this newspaper's gratitude and appreciation to the Board of Judges for the long hours spent in the examination and study of the many replies to the ten historical questions on which the contest was based.

State Commissioner of Education James G. Reardon, Boston University Professor Robert E. Moody, Mrs. James Cunningham Gray, State Legion Commander William F. Ryan and Lexington Selectman Archie R. Giroux—these distinguished judges worked even on Sunday, giving equal consideration to every entry.

Their patriotic spirit should be an inspiration to every boy and girl in the State.

Getting Up Steam -:- -:- By Nelson Harding

This is the only factory
They have in Washington, D. C.
The plant again is all alight,
And will be running day and night.

A busy legislative mill
Steams up on that historic hill.
We who await the whistle's blast,
Say: "Take it easy—not too fast!"

New York Day by Day

By O. O. McIntyre

New York, Jan. 6—Sheila Barrett is the season's outstanding top flight night club "draw." And the most lucky, paid. Her following is largely among folk from the Long Island, Hamptons and the Silver Strand area. Her patter is mimicry in a grand and heat since the reign of Cleo and Nan.

O. O. McIntyre

Miss Barrett was born in Washington, D. C. Her father, of a well known attorney and educated at a Pittsburgh convent. She's one of the few performers who go in for athletics, being a several times medal winner in swimming and is also an accomplished equestrienne.

But her ambition was for the stage. Finding herself too tall for ingenue parts she decided to capitalize those fortunate endowments to get them. Her first engagement was as a show girl with the Greenwich Village Follies. She admits no critical choice and a few hungry interludes.

Her favorite impersonation and one that always keeps up her prestige is mimic of Lionel Square and Heywood Broun. Sometimes she can catch a caricature with one visit. Other times she may have to see her subject ten times. Her best friend and favorite writer is Lois Long.

Food Fancies. There are certain edibles as we all know of which it is so easy to overeat. Fresh peppers and chili, for instance. Somehow one can always reach for another mouthful.

In days when spitting gift ewers graced a mixed Herald Square there was an amiable character of the days known as Popcorn Bill. Every one had his well-filled bowl of popcorn, and it was a part of Bill's fun-fly activities to devour the entire bowl—just for the fun of it and some free drinks. He was a fine Dudley Field Malone build, weighing more than 175 pounds, and it was said he could consume a dozen bowls of popcorn a day along with a healthy appetite for regular food.

Bill Popcorn Bill journeyed in the well for often and one night after an extraordinary bout fell in a paroxysm and reached the hospital D. O. A.

Somerset Maugham is reputedly the most cutting of the conversationalists. A master of riposte, he can lash out with a murderous sarcasm that slashes mercilessly. A kindly fellow ordinarily with a velvety resistant voice, he has no patience with bromide or sham.

Rebecca West in a recent Cosmopolitan tells of the day Maugham met a lady clad in deep mourning for a relative who had been unrivaled in tediousness and who had left her a considerable fortune. He fixed his gaze on her flowing crape and, after what seemed a respectful hiatus, archly inquired:

"Would a glass of sherry be any help in your great grief?"

Maugham has just turned 63 with the zest for life of an eager sophomore on gay, although he says in print, he finds everything. With London his base, he has been a world traveler with his valet Hodgkins for Horner, Sunsatra or where-not.

More than any other author he's the true cosmopolite. There isn't a far-flung on any outer rim of the world where he cannot drop in meet the importants as well as the unimportants, immediately into the gossip of the locality. His favorite spot is Tunis, North Africa, which is to be no gay this winter.

Listen, World!

By Elsie Robinson

Often you've wondered about the mystery of yourself.

Here is this thing you call your body—doing those things which belong to the body—eating, sleeping, playing, working, feeling and expressing hate, desire, joy, despair, coldness or fondness.

But here, also, is something besides your body—something with a life of its own, outside and beyond the body's life. Another self—a self that secretly inhabits the body.

Elsie Robinson

Often you wonder about those two selves . . . thinking of them as a stranger might think of them . . . realizing how different your secret, invisible self, with its noble dreams and hungers is from your body self with its cunning and grubbing and scuffling.

And you are bewildered and sad. Why are you made this way—with two selves, so different?

Why is part of you always a lost and lonely stranger to the other part? If only the world could know that secret Self of yours . . . that finer, braver, kinder, more honest self. But it doesn't. It knows you are what you seem to be . . . believes you are that greedy, cowardly, dishonest, weak self of which you are often bitterly ashamed. But you're not that self—you're NOT!

EVERY MAN'S PRAYER

And out of you goes a great, unanswered cry reaching, reaching . . . reaching for Someone who will understand that you are not what you seem, that you are better than you seem. A cry of protest in defense of your real self.

All your life, since first you began to think about yourself, this cry of yours has been reaching . . . it was unheard. And you have gone on and on, thinking all the while that you alone uttered that wordless cry of misunderstanding. But everyone is like that—poor, ugly, beggar, millionaire, all are alike in that. And from them all rises that same cry of bewilderment and defiance.

Walt Whitman, who wrote of men's souls and their naked hearts, knew that you were not alone, put this mystery into his immortal words, "I am large, I contain multitudes."

That shadow my likeness that goes to and fro seeking a livelihood, chattering, chaffing.

How often I find myself standing and looking at it where it flits.

How often I question and doubt whether that is really me.

"But among my lovers and caroling these songs,

"O, I never doubt whether that is really me."

How often you have said the same thing to yourself! For you, too, wonder about that self-assertive self that goes and its seeking a livelihood—and have felt often to be chattering and prating about that other, finer self, which seeks and dreams and sings and hungers the truth—you do not feel a stranger to that self, nor have any doubts about it. You know that is your true self!

YOUR BEST POSSESSION

Always at the end of that path in your true self. No matter what happens to you . . . no matter how often you may betray that true self, or be betrayed by it . . . it is your best possession in life. For that faith in the greatness of your love. It is the one thing which will lift you above all shame, humiliation, hardship and pain . . . and give you the pride of a king through the worst days of a slave.

That's That -:- By Bruce Gustin

The new year here we find the great nations of the earth TALKING peace but making ready for another arms race. Every nation feels called upon to keep in step. The fact that all of them are head over heels in debt makes no difference. They will beg, borrow or confiscate the money they need.

Epidemics of influenza create alarm in many parts of the country, it is scientifically established. CARELESSNESS—is prevalent all the time, but comparatively few succumb to the actual fact. The 1936 traffic death toll is estimated at approximately 36,000 persons, a fact which during the last year more than a hundred people have been killed every day in the week and Sunday. And in addition thousands have been injured. Speeding, drunken driving and various other causes are ascribed for this scandalous traffic death toll. The real cause of the overwhelming majority of accidents is CARELESSNESS.

Senator Overton of Louisiana plans to reintroduce his sugar bill, providing for unrestricted production and benefit payments to producers. It also includes quotas for all offshore areas. How long as this country is producing less sugar than it uses, it is foolish to restrict domestic production of sugar. No American industry should be required to curtail its output just to provide a market for its foreign competitors. "AMERICA FOR AMERICANS" should be our motto.

The Navy Department has failed a second time to get bids for 2,000,000 pounds of copper, obviously because Walsh-Healy Act binding contractors to abide by labor regulations prevented the government from demanding the unwillingness of copper companies to make a bid. Naval officials are afraid their new construction program will be hampered. Copper companies apparently are fearful it will be helpful to their business to have the government dictating wages and working hours.

An Amusing Society

The Human Side of the News

By Edwin C. Hill

With the new year, the time is appropriate, I think, to give quite unsolicited publicity to one of the least known yet most useful organizations in our American life. I refer to the Guild of Former Pipe Organ Pumpers. This remarkable association of pioneers Americans came into being some years ago through the imagination, energy and devotion to the public service of Dr. Chet Shafer, F. R. S. G. H. A., L. L. D. and S. O. S.

Edwin C. Hill

It was about ten years ago that Dr. Shafer resolved to do something about the preservation of two American institutions, the cigar-store Indian and the wooden deer and dogs of the front lawns of our Victorian grandfathers. And the organization of the Guild of Former Pipe Organ Pumpers grew, most logically and reasonably, from that ideal.

Who, indeed, should be more interested in the preservation for posterity of the cast-iron wild life of America and the wooden cigar-store Indian of America than the man who, as young boys, hand-pumped the pipe organs in their native towns?

Not long ago, at an honorary member of this remarkable group, I was privileged to attend an annual meeting. The topic for the evening (often lost or obscured by other burning questions) was nothing less than the issue in merchandise between Dr. H. L. Mencken and the fundamentalists. "Should the love affairs of the cigar-store Indian be limited?"

A GRAVE PROBLEM

Henry, one reader will recall, insists that the cigar-store Indian should be utterly unrestricted in his affairs, whereas the fundamentalists assert angrily that they must be rigidly controlled. Bernard Shaw, oddly enough, sided with the fundamentalists, although Mr. Mencken has the unqualified support of One-Eyed Connolly.

At all events, this question made a stormy affair of the annual meeting and, after hours of hitter controversy, it remained as undetermined as before. On top of it came the almost equally bitter division of opinion as to whether the guild should negotiate with the Society for the Preventing of Calling Pullman Porters George. This proposition was put forward by Dr. Chet Shafer, F. R. S. G. H. A. and S. O. S., and hotly opposed by an element of the guild led by Dr. McCardell, the humorist. The principal address was delivered by the Grand Diapason of the Guild of Former Pipe Organ Pumpers, Dr. Shafer.

The appearance of the gentleman—his physical aspect—is sufficiently remarkable to warrant special mention. He lacks just one and three-quarters inches of being 6 feet tall, yet his weight is exactly 114 pounds. He has appeared in various well-known motion pictures of the better sort, supporting Greta Garbo, Dolores del Rio, Miss Swanson and other screen sirens.

By profession, Dr. Shafer is a trout tickler, probably the most erudite trout tickler in the world. He is so ranked by Dr. Raymond L. Ditmars, ichthyologist and reptilian expert. This remarkable personality began his address by outlining the program of the guild for the current year. There was work ahead, said Dr. Shafer, which was fully as important as any labor of the past, not excluding the astounding achievement in furnishing nesterings for American-bred goldfish.

"CAST-IRON WILD LIFE"

In his vivid and colorful way, the great trout tickler proposed that for the coming year the guild devote its energies toward rescuing and taking steps to preserve the remains of the once numerous and glorious cast-iron wild animal life of America.

"It is well known, but little regarded," said Dr. Shafer, "that only a few years ago the lawns of our rich men—and even the front yards of the less successful—were decorated with ferrous fauna.

"As we strolled by on Sunday afternoons, we gazed enviously upon the great cast-iron stags, mastiffs, wolves or even horses that graced these lawns. But where are these noble objects of American art now, these memories of the late Hamburg-American period?

"I propose that this society organize a safari, well-conditioned and equipped, which shall go on an expedition to rescue such of this cast-iron wild animal life as may still be in existence and that, when certain specimens have been recovered, that they be preserved in perpetuity in a national park, such as the Yosemite or Yellowstone, for the eternal pleasure and delectation of the American people, than whom there are no grander people on God's footstool, as George Washington said in his farewell address."

Dow L. McCardell followed Dr. Shafer upon the speakers' stand, although not to the hospital. He offered himself as a witness of the forthcoming expedition.

"I offer $100 in lawful legal tender of the United States," said Dr. McCardell, "for a specimen I beheld upon a breeder's lawn in Staten Island some 30 years ago. This specimen was an elephant, fully, possibly three feet high. It reposed in a castiron escalloped sea shell.

"The stubby right arm of Cupid was extended trustfully toward an enormous cast-iron mastiff upon whose neck was a genuine collar and chain. And whom the mastiff? Why the cast-iron Cupid rested a cast-iron butterfly."

A report submitted by various members on the urgency of abolishing guttapercha bungalows and conch shells from the aquaria of America was placed on file. I feel sure that the romantic plea for a campaign of education will meet with the support and sympathy of every reader of this column.

Every-Day "Miracles"

By Benjamin DeCasseres

The other day we were amused by reading that a well-known ventriloquist had bequeathed $1000 for the upkeep after his death of his dummy, "Charlie McCarthy."

That may serve to revive interest among the thoughtful in a phenomenon that in its way is as great a "miracle" as radio, the X-ray and television.

Here we have speech produced and projected for a distance in an atmospheric wave. On the surface, it is a "trick" of the "hollo-breath," constricting the glottis and moving only the tip of the tongue.

But, like the X-ray, the radio wave, and television, a NON-MAL LAW IS TRANSCENDED, which is evidence that a normal law is only a HABIT OF BELIEF OR OBSERVATION; that abnormal vital forces do not depend entirely on the usual sense channels—as in the marvelous case of Helen Keller, who is born deaf, blind and dumb from early infancy graduated from Radcliffe College, Cum Laude. Miss Keller can HEAR THROUGH HER FINGERS.

Ventriloquy was known to the ancients and played . . . as "belly-prophecy" an important part in oracular religious rites.

The "speaking statues" of the Egyptians, the "voice" of Memnon, at Delphos, the "speaking statues" of the River Patelus were all believed all done by ventriloquist Greek priests.

To the thoughtful mind the phenomena of ventriloquy are more than merely amusing. If we were not so cocked and clothed in mental habit we should see that it is another proof of the multiverse we live in is a MANSION OF MIRACLES.

We accept the simple facts of every-day life and the phenomena of sex, of speech, of science as commonplace because repetition dulls the edge of wonder.

To explain the MANNER in which a thing is done does not explain the thing itself.

Electricity, for instance, is a common, every-day phenomenon. We switch on and off a light as we would switch on and off the material of it.

Electricity itself is an incomprehensible mystery, like light, air, space, time and thought.

Pull our good old mother earth apart, and we find the electron by electron, and the incomprehensible and awesome MYSTERY of electronic and atomic power still remains.

Photography is an every-day "miracle." What is more extraordinary than that light can reproduce the image of an object on a sensitized plate? A camera no more "explains" this than a clock explains time.

The act of controlling walking, the movement of a finger or speech by an act of our invisible will is a miracle as great as any. NOTHING IS SO FIRMLY BELIEVED AS WHAT WE LEAST KNOW.

Isn't It So?

You can't judge a man by his wife's estimate of him. One man's wife said her husband is a "brute" because he refused to give her another new car, while another one said her husband is "gentleman" because he never knocked her down.

What a pity that holidays in this country are made hideous by the wanton sacrifice of human lives. And they are getting worse all the time. One shudders to think what this year's toll will be. Civilized people should be able to drive autos without killing themselves or one another.
